THE IDEAL HEAD.

ELLO! WHAT'S this?"

John Ainsworth stooped to pick up a gold cross, which was lying on the sidewalk outside his office door. Being intent on his morning duties, he had put it in his waist-coat pocket without further thought, for this was a busy man, the editor of a great daily paper. The small portion of his time which was not spent in the sancum of his office was devoted to his snug rooms in a large apartment house; it was there that he gained what little rest and pleasure his busy life afforded him. John Ainsworth was in every sense of the word a man of culture and refinement, with very little fondness for society. In fact, he had studiously avoided the other residents of the house and perhaps it was for that reason that he ascended the elevator, preferring to bound up the marble stairs to his cozy room on the third floor. This habit greatly amused his young brother, Elliott, who shared his home and any other comforts that the gods or John provided. Elliott was a lazy, happy-go-lucky artist, whose profession had not as yet brought him an income.

When John entered the pretty sitting-room that evening, he found his brother putting the finishing touches to what he was pleased to call an "ideal head." "Hello! Jack. I've been waiting ages for you. Shall we dine at the Albemarle to-night?"

"Why, no. I am going to the Writer's club, so you must look out for yourself this evening."

"Well, all right, only look at this a moment before you dress. Don't you think there is something sweet in the expression?"

John walked to the easel and glanced carelessly at the sketch, rather bored to be forced to spend time on one of Elliott's many daubs. But for once his attention was arrested. Something in the light-brown eyes appealed to him, and as he studied the face it seemed more and more to beseech his friendliness at least. The waving, chestnut hair, the delicately molded brow, the sweet, thin lips, and the daintiness of contour all united in completing a beautiful face.

"Elliott, you rascal, you have stolen this! By Jove, it's the best you have done!"

Elliott could not conceal his satisfaction at his brother's honest praise, for who was so dear to him as sober old John?

"Thank you, Jack, and to tell you the truth, it's a face I've seen and dreamed about but painted entirely from memory."

"Where did you see her? If you have really portrayed some living girl she must be indeed a beauty!"

Elliott seemed well pleased that an answer was not expected. He put up his paints and brushes and the editor and his brother prepared for the evening, one going to his club, and the other sauntering off to a favorite cafe to eat, smoke and dream about the subject of his sketch.

The next morning when John put his hand in his pocket for his car-fare, he ran against something unusual and pulling it out recognized the little golden cross. He looked at it carefully and saw the inscription "Muriel" upon it. When he raised his head, he blushed to see the light-brown eyes of Elliott's sketch watching him demurely, even appealingly. It seemed to him; it must be she, the same brow, the waving hair, the dainty lips and, best of all, the wonderful eyes!

For some reason he felt much disconcerted and hastily replaced the cross in his pocket, sinking behind his newspaper, though furtively glancing across the aisle only to find the hazel eyes still fastened upon him.

Now, John Ainsworth had reached the sober age of 35 and if any one had told him that a pair of hazel-eyes would set his heart to beating like a steam pump or cause a crimson hue to suffice his manly face he would have scoffed at the idea. But that was just what was going on this very morning and as the sensation was so new and so alarming the only idea that came to him was flight. So, taking one more look at the girlish figure, he made his way to the door of the car and dropped off, only to regret it, as in a moment he was overcome to discover that he had voluntarily given up the only chance of finding out who she was or where she was going, for he was suddenly aware of intense interest in her where abouts. Following his first impulse, he started at a lively pace to pursue the car, but stopped shortly when he heard

"Hold on there, Jack, old man! What's the rush? Is there a fire or are you after a scoop?"

"Well, you here? I managed to get off at the wrong corner and thought to regain the car." John smiled blandly as he manufactured this weak explanation.

"THANK YOU SO MUCH."

"Your supper last night must have been too much for you, though I should have supposed you would have slept off the effects. At any rate, as this is fine morning let us walk on downtown. I'd like to take you in to see some water colors at Brown's."

"Speaking about water colors, what are you going to do with that head?"

"You won't sell it, will you?"

"Won't I? Won't I, if I can find any patron of art who appreciates it to the tune of $100 or so? This art for art's sake is all very poetical, but the time is coming, my boy, when I must earn living."

John looked at his brother in surprise, but Elliott continued:

"You know, I can't always expect to live on your honesty, Jack. You may be wishing to marry some day your-"

"I don't know about that; we are all liable to succumb, but don't let me tell you, Brown's, anyway. I want to and if I take it you can show it at the spring exhibition, and, perhaps, gain glory, if not wealth. And I'll supply the funds, old chap, till your pictures bring your own price, which will possibly be sooner than you think, if you can make more ideal heads like this last one."

The subject was settled in John's way, which was always the best way, though Elliott really wondered a little if John's fancy for the ideal head.

LONDON'S NEW PET.

The First of the Dark Blotched Kind to Reach Europe.

The Zoological Society is to be congratulated on the acquisition of another giraffe. For several years now the giraffe house in the Zoological Gardens has not been tenanted by the animals from which the building derives its name; and for some time it was considered very doubtful that the society would be able to obtain another specimen, owing to the increasing scarcity and the difficulty of catching and transporting the giraffe. One that was brought over some years ago was found, on arriving, to be bound up from head to foot in flannel bands and looked very much like a mummy; this one has not been indulged to that extent, but seems none the worse for its voyage. It is supposed to be the first example of the large darkly blotched kind ever seen in Europe; it comes from South Africa; the previous specimens were from northern tropical Africa and were paler in color. It is a young animal, thought to be about a year old; it stands over ten feet high, and is therefore attaining maturity. Some considerable difficulty was experienced in passing the tall box in which it was confined under railway bridges; however the tenant is now safely lodged in its quarters, and seems very happy and comfortable, regarding with great interest the crowd of spectators and artists who generally surround it. The attendants are anxious to give the animal a grooming, but the giraffe entertains contrary opinions on the subject, and any attempt for the present would be frustrated by kicks of no gentle kind.

TEETH WORTH $7,500.

A Convict Trades Valuable Information for a Set.

A well-known firm of bankers in London has just made a profitable investment. Some time ago a man who terrorized them of a large sum of money was taken into custody, convicted, and sentenced to a long term of penal servitude. The prison fare did not agree with a man who had by means of fraud lived on the fat of the land, says London Tidbits. The change affected him in many ways, but he complained more particularly of the effect the food had upon his teeth. They were not numerous or in good condition when he was sentenced, and as they rapidly became worse he applied to the governor of the prison for a new set. He was told that the government did not supply prisoners with artificial teeth, and at the first opportunity he wrote to the banking firm in question, offering, if they would send him a new set, to give some valuable information. Thereupon the bankers, thinking the offer might be a genuine one, sent the governor of the prison a check for $5, and asked him to provide the convict with a set of artificial teeth. In due course the convict kept his promise and sent the bankers certain information, by means of which they were enabled to recover no less than $1,500 of which they had been defrauded. They naturally regarded this as the best investment they had ever made, but it proved even better than anticipated, for they just received from the prison authorities a remittance for $1, the teeth having cost only $4.

Men Who Flatter.

Now, girls, let me give you a huge slice of friendly advice. It is fashioned from a common sense recipe and is worthy of your notice. Do not allow heart and mind to become entrapped by attentions that are not attentions. Society is overrun with young men who are selfishly indiscriminate in this direction. They do not mean to be, but every allowance must be made for them upon the score of not understanding a woman's heart. She will always remain to man an unfathomable mystery. Born with a tender, loving nature that longs for some one to appreciate and care for her, she is too apt to place her heart, mind and soul in the keeping of an admirer who is simply that and nothing more. Now an admirer does not mean lover by any means. A man may admire a woman heartily and sincerely without the slightest thought of making her his wife, but just let an officious friend stand at her elbow and throw in a word of encouragement. It is only a hint here or a suggestion there, but it goes Trifles light as air are given a pitiful substantiality, and one fine day this victim to a woman's cruelty wakes up to find herself an object for divinity.

Mrs. Cleveland is very fond of flowers, and blossoms grow in every apartment in the white house. There is also a conservatory which the Clevelands have greatly enlarged and improved, and here the lady of the executive mansion spends much of her time.

The Queen of Madagascar always dresses in European fashion. She wears a purple costume with a train on great occasions, and sometimes assumes a golden crown. She is very vain of her personal beauty, and has three times refused to accept a cold struck to her order, because she did not consider her likeness sufficiently handsome for circulation.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

A whale is an animal. It is warm blooded; its young are born alive. The mother suckles them just as a cow suckles its calves.

The albatross has been known to follow a ship for two months without ever being seen to alight in the water or to a moment's rest. It is believed to sleep on the wing.

The Missouri is the longer river, and the Mississippi really joins the Missouri. But the Mississippi was discovered first, and obtained the reputation being the principal stream.

The mole is not so blind as many persons suppose, according to an English authority. Its eye is hardly larger than a pin head, and is carefully protected from mist and dirt by means of closing hairs.

Distinct tides in the atmosphere, corresponding to those of the sea, and produced twice daily by lunar attraction, have been traced by M. Bouquet de la Grye in the barometric records of stations removed from powerful local disturbances.

The bottom of the Atlantic forms a sort of terrace along the continent, sloping gradually for several miles, then suddenly descending to a far greater depth, in general, about 100 miles from the shore there is a depth of 100 fathoms, but in ten miles the depth exceeds 1,000 fathoms.

Advertising without a well-defined plan is an foolish as going to sea without a compass.

It is an apparent fact that advertising space on the stations and in the cars of the New York elevated railroads is not in use by advertisers to the extent it was six months ago.

Although advertising pays, and pays well, yet not one advertisement in six brings back its cost to the advertiser. It is out of repeated failure that the greatest advertising successes are evolved.

Nicotinized Nerves.

Man old at thirty. Chew and smoke, eat little, drink water, and when the time comes, never smokes again, the nerves tingling, gone, a tobacco-saturated system tells the story. There's an easy way out. No-to-Sac will kill the nerve-racking effects for tobacco smokers.

"Hush, John, dear," whispered the girl who looked like the picture.

"All right, old fellow, I'll put in the cross; you want everything you want," the young man said, rather wistfully, as he moved on, apparently much interested in a large painting near by, leaving the other two standing close together, seeing more beautiful pictures in each other's eyes than ever hung on any wall.

MARRIED 100 YEARS.

All Marriage Records Broken by This Interesting Old Couple.

The hundredth man has been a character of fiction, but it is reserved for sober fact and reality to instance the man who can celebrate his hundredth wedding anniversary. Such a celebration actually occurred during the month of April in a little village of Hungary, Zsombolca by name, the still happy bridegroom being 116 years of age and named Jean Szathmary, and his bride a year his junior. These people were peasants and among the poorest in the little Hungarian town, but the fact of their having lived to celebrate so unique an occurrence as the hundredth anniversary of their marriage has made them the most honored citizens of the place. The little municipality of Zsombolca has voted them a pension, and so long as they live they will be taken care of by the village. The Viennese journals sent correspondents to describe the old couple in the fullest detail.

STATUES TO HAVE ARTISTIC CRITICISM.

It was decided in future in New York to refer all statues for the parks to the Sculptors' Society for criticism as to their artistic merits before accepting them. The advisory art committee of the art department, which has in the past passed upon the statues, will act in the future with the Sculptors' Society.

WOMEN.

The princess of Wales has a collection of lace that is worth at least $300,000.

The ex-Empress Eugenie is staying at Monte Carlo, occupying her leisure with the writing of her reminiscences since she ascended the throne of France.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt denies that she ever said that woman is the equal of man. What she did say and repeats is that the actress is the equal of the actor.

The Nevada assembly has voted 11 to 11 in favor of full suffrage for women. The measure had passed the senate two days before by a majority of six votes.

Mrs. Bradley-Martin is always talked about when the questions of jewels comes up, on account of her owning and having worn before she went into the famous jeweled crown of the ill-fated Queen Marie Antoinette.

According to Mr. Cross, in his memoirs of his wife, the reason she took the name of George Eliot was, as she explains it, "because George was Mr. Lewes' Christian name, and Eliot was a good, mouth-filling, easily pronounced word."

Mrs. Cleveland is very fond of flowers, and blossoms grow in every apartment in the white house. There is also a conservatory which the Clevelands have greatly enlarged and improved, and here the lady of the executive mansion spends much of her time.

KNOWLEDGE.

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectively cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation.

It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.
