

Chivary Complex

By GARRY SMITH

BY NOON factors hopes in the employment manager's ante-room at Crumby & Co. looked down to Jimmy Wheeler and the "Plucked Chicken." They had dimmed since nine, waiting to be hired or to hear, "We'll be your application and to you know if anything turns up."

Jimmy put the first of these checks at less than hundred-to-one shot. Odds had reversed on him since that independence day two weeks ago when his ex-boss had spoken overwornly and Jimmy's true soul chased Jimmy of the payroll.

As for the Plucked Chicken, Jimmy considered the Old Run-around a sure thing. He hadn't given her a second look for fear he'd feel sorry for her. No name to put in a mail in distress, the formerly chivalrous Jimmy admitted guiltily. But he'd seen too many such letters. He'd scored on the one any time since his boss's secretary had been off of a job and his into one since he'd stood up for her. "That chivalry complex of yours is a nuisance," the boss had roared. Old Fletcher hadn't been wrong. Jimmy agreed with him now.

The assistant manager gave Jimmy a blank to fill and turned to the Plucked Chicken. Elizabeth Bled was her name actually. Someone's private secretary once, would grab a typist job now. "We have a long waiting list. I'm afraid it's not even while waiting for a job," was all she drew. Not even the Old Run-around Jimmy hadn't been wrong. Jimmy agreed with him now.

"And let me know if anything turns up," Jimmy smiled. He wondered how many such days his hand-drawn resume would stand, as he followed Miss Bled's wake.

The girl was waiting for the elevator, a fragile arm braced against the wall. The dim light here softened the cheekbones, hid worry-lines and sad gray blackness. Why she was class, a beauty once, before she began staring to death! The elevator came and she sprang toward it, would have fallen if Jimmy hadn't caught her.

"Thank you, I'm clumsy!" Her face lit and Jimmy looked into deep violet eyes. Then face and eyes went dead again. She'd stand on the street, he worried. He breakfast probably. He must do something quick. At the street door Jimmy clucked the stem of an idea.

"Pardon me, aren't you Miss Bled in Crumby's just now? They said you might do a letter or so for me. I'm James Wheeler. Publicity man. With the Fletcher bureau. Crumby had another good try on his list but couldn't reach her. Leaves me in a lurch."

Her eyes widened warily then turned eager.

New Vaccine Controls Disease In Cattle

Michigan State College has again made a major contribution to the livestock industry of the state. According to Henry P. Edmond, local veterinarian, the development of Brucella (S4) vaccine is particularly important to dairy and beef farmers.

Thousands of dollars are lost annually due to Bang's disease through aborted calves, breeding troubles and the sale of high quality breeding stock for slaughter.

Cattlemen should take advantage of this new vaccine as soon as possible through advice of their veterinarian.

Bang's disease in cattle may be prevented from spreading and its resulting disease in humans—undulant fever—prevented by the use of one of the successful vaccines.

Released recently by Michigan dairyman through members of the veterinary profession, the new vaccine will be used in wide scale tests on Michigan dairy herds. Use of Brucella (S4) vaccine during the past two years has been successful in limiting the spread of the disease to four per cent of the susceptible herds.

Work on this new vaccine started four years ago. It is a suspension of live and dead bacterial cells of Brucella suis. At present the vaccine is prepared to produce the vaccine in quantities to treat 2,000 cattle per dose.

The great value of the new vaccine is seen in the possibility of preventing the spread of the disease in humans. Recently infected herds, by doing it will become possible to eliminate infected animals, immunize the remainder and not only a disease free herd but one which is immune from brucellosis.

From the standpoint of human life and suffering, the elimination of brucellosis would mean halting the spread of undulant fever. This human disease is spread by contact with infectious material from infected animals or by consuming infected food from animals with brucellosis.

It is estimated that in Michigan alone, milk production is reduced as much as 22,000,000 pounds annually because of brucellosis in cattle—at four dollars a hundredweight this means a loss of more than $8,800,000 annually in Michigan. Michigan has about two million cattle, about half of which are milking dairy cows.

Clinton Upsets

Clinton defeated the local Dutchmen 18-9 last Friday night on their home field for the Dutchmen's fifth defeat against two wins.

The win gave Clinton a 500 per cent average.

Manchester had hard luck in the first of the game when Chuck Steele was injured. The Dutchmen threatened Clinton only once, when they got to the 10 yard line.

Cutless invaded the local gridiron Friday night for the last game of the season.
