For many of those who wish to attend college a little pushing will be needed, and you are best situated to administer that push.

The whole problem of education in a period of national and international crisis is one that can hardly be solved by educators alone. I should very much like to hear from you, at your convenience, your own ideas in this matter. It is not the educational institutions that need help: it is the young people whom they serve.

For many of those who wish to from high school has every thing to gain and nothing to lose by doing so. He may be able to college-traine exceedingly preservation when he takes off his uniform. Although it cannot yet be said with certainty, it is quite possible that many advanced students will be able to complete their college work before being called into service.
