Opening-Day Deer Hunting Good Despite Coldest Nov. 15 In Memory

In line with their usual first full Saturday-Sunday upspurge, Michigan deer hunters went back to their stump-settin chore this weekend with a long-range promise of moderate weather- (maybe just a little fresh snow) and memories—or hearsay evidence—of one of the most unusual opening days, last Sunday, ever recorded.

It was both miserable and fog or blizzard, but few could remember when there was statewide ground cover of snow . . and zero, sub-zero and near-zero temperatures on

The severe cold hurt and helped hunting. Some hunters waited for the sun to come up. Some who didn't wait returned to their cars in a hurry. But, for warmth's sake, more hunters moved around as the day progressed and this movement. against the white background.

Snow ranging up to 20 inches in some sections of the western

Some 45 years ago there were about three million automobiles. In 1959 there were an estimated 57 million. There is one car for every 3.4 persons—or one for each family in the U.S. World motor vehicle registration is estimated at 108 million.

In most of the northern Lover Peninsula, conditions were ideal by fairly early in the morning—cold but not too cold, sunshine, good visibility, tracking snow and deer ranging the ridges.

Capsule Look
Boiling down information from the length and breadth of the state, here's a capsule look

state opening:

Definitely more hunters in some areas, "probably a few more" in several others, "about normal" in still others... and some speculation that license sales, for the first time, might show up a thalf a million.

Hunter success, fair to very good. Opening-day harvest almost certainly equal to or better than first day last year on bucks, with evidence at some voluntary checking stations that a substantial number of "any deer" permit holders took their "any deer" without trying first for bucks.

Of bucks checked at the voluntary checking stations, 76, per cent were year-and-a-halfolds, with a big exception on the Porter Ranch, opened to public hunting this year for the olds.

Accidents Down
Possibly because of snowy, background and better visibility, opening day, with peak numbers afield, was marked by only one gunshot fatality.

The bear kill generally was light, but several large specimens were taken.
Violations appeared to be about as usual, but the picture was somewhat obscured by the fact that deer country Conservation Department personnel had to get along with far less heip from Southern Michigan officers than ever before.

Adding up the opinions and impressions of many hunters, there was a marked decline in number of illegal kills seen in the woods.

The shiny new '60 cars you've seen appearing in show rooms all over Michigan—know now they got there? 85% of the new automobiles the country over travel by motor carrier from factory to dealer— and this applies pretty well to Michigan . . . That's only part of the story of how much the automobile industry depends on trucks. The basic materials, the parts and accessories—everything that goes into the manufacture of automobiles—travels most if not all the way from source to destination by truck . . . BETTER HALF

Since the soul and body together were considered to make up man, one's more important or spiritual self was called "fine better half." In his famous Arcadia, Sir Philip Sidney applied the phrase to union between husband and wife rather than body and soul. But every husband with a spark of honesty has used better half to name the woman who makes up more than half his life.
