Roosevelt's Idea of Man

It is not the critic who counts, not he can who points out how the strong nan stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done better. The eredit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dost and sweat; who strives valiantwho errs and may fail again and again, because there is no effort with out error and shortcoming, but who does actually strive to do the deeds who does know the great enthusiasm the great devotion; who spends him self in a worthy cause, who, at the best, knows in the end the triumph of high achievement and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat.-Theodore Roosevelt.

Model Lover a Bricklayer

Common brick has always played an important part in the building industries throughout the world. Volumes have been written on the history and uses to which bricks have been put but not on their romance, says the New York Herald-Tribune.

In the Italian city of Bologna there remain two towers of brick, sole sur vivors of approximately 180 similar ones said to have been erected be tween the Tenth and Thirteenth centuries. Legends say it was the custom to knights to win their ladies fair by erecting brick towers, taller than the one constructed by rivals.

Famous Group of Stars

The Pleiades is a group of small stars in the constellation Taurus, very conspicuous on winter evenings about 24 degrees north of the equator. For some unknown reason there were an ciently said to be seven Pleiades, although only six were conspicuous then as now; hence the suggestion of a lost Pleiad. In mythology the Pleiades were said to be the daughters of Atlas and Pleione, and were named Alcyone, Merope, Celaeno, Electra, Sterope or Asterope, Taygeta and Maia.

No Change in Status

A man ran away with the wife of a neighbor. The local clergyman called upon the deserted husband to attempt to console him, but the man seemed singularly cheerful considering the nature of his loss. "It's too bad; too bad!" said the clergyman. "I understand that the man who persuaded your wife to elope with him was your best friend." The husband smiled.

'Yes," he said, "he was—and be is!"

Killed at 104 Years

When old Dr. Yernest, the Swedish doctor, scientist and inventor, was killed at the age of 104 years by fall-ing from his horse, there is no telling how long he might have lived to prove that he had rediscovered the ancient secret of prolonging life.

He proved that the secret of good health—the secret of prolonging life— was to keep the digestive organs in good condition and that all the elements to sustain life and to replenish waste tissue could be secured from pure and wholesome food.

His remedy made of Roots and Herbs he called "ESSENCE OF LIFE," for it seemed to restore vitality and strength to all who used it.

He gave away thousands of packages of his "ESSENCE OF LIFE" and you can also secure a free trial (now made in pill form) if you will cut out his picture and mail it to M. R. Zaegel & Co., chemists, 630 Eighth St., She-

Taken Too Lightly

There were 22,000 persons killed and 700,000 injured on American highways last year, 85 per cent of these accidents being due to the automobile.

"The road hog is too leniently treated," said Secretary Hoover, in a discussion of traffic conditions at a banquet. "We take his crimes in too light a manner.

"A road hog in a crimson racer upset Smith, and then came back to see if he was dead.

"'Are you dead, man?' he yelled. "Smith answered with a gay laugh from the ditch where he lay with a broken leg:

"'Oh, no, not dead, dear boy-only run down.'

Truth never was indebted to a lie. fame is to be admired.

Wonderful Experience

When Henry Oldys, naturalist and authority on bird calls, died recently at Rockville, Md., he left a will which contains this paragraph: "I commend my soul to God in the hope that, despite its unworthiness to enjoy the great privilege, he will allow it to continue its existence after the death of my body. Should I be denied this great boon, yet am I deeply grateful that I have been permitted to enjoy this beautiful world, to think and to feel. It has been a wonderful and delightful experience, and I thank my God with an overflowing heart that I have lived. My one regret is that I have dealt so unworthily with the life he lent me."

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, head-ache and loss of ambition. Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so. But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions. Many send Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By inclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by Parcel Post. You can purchase medium and

FOOLISH TO WORRY ABOUT ONE'S HEART

Persons who are the surest they have weak hearts are in mans cases laboring under a delusion, while the ones who least suspect it are those whose hearts need treatment.

This is the opinion of Dr. William Duncan Reid, Boston heart specialist, who tells in Hygeia why heart disease heads the list in the mortality statis-

"Many persons come to the doctor with some such list of symptoms as these-rapid heart action with pain around the heart, shortness of breath, lizziness, opposition, blue-skinned hands. That sounds like a bona fide sick heart, doesn't it? Well, it isn't. The doctors call it effort syndrome, which means that due to some disturbing factor a set of symptoms appear simulating cardiac disease although no impairment of the heart has occurred.'

The only way to know if your heart s in good condition is to have a periodic examination by your doctor and not worry, says Doctor Reid.

Converse With Insects Only Matter of Time

J. B. S. Haldane, the British biochemist, says in the Forum that it's only a question of time before man will be talking with bees and ants. The investigations of Wheeler of Harvard have made it very probable that the behavior of social insects such as ants. instead of being based on a complicated series of special instincts, rests largely on an economic foundation not so very unlike our own. The ant that for it by a sweet juice secreted by how much one bee can tell another and date of less death was November 13, how it does it. Tomorrow it looks as | 1868.

if we should be overhearing the conversation of bees, and the day after to morrow joining in it. We may be able to tell our hive bees that there is a tin of molasses for them if they will fertilize those apple trees five minutes' fly to the southeast; Mr. Johnson's tree over the wall can wait. To do this we should probably need a model bee to make the right movements of its feelers, and perhaps the right nose and smell. Why should we wait to see if there are "men" on Mars when we have on our own planet highly social and fairly intelligent beings with a means of communication? Talking with bees will be a tough job, but easier than a voyage to Mars.

A Salute

Bill works in a downtown office. He has a habit, when yawning, of indulging in a good stretch, which brings the arms above the head in a wavelike motion.

He was visibly embarrassed a few days ago when a business caller at another desk in the office noticed the wave-like motion of the arms, and, thinking the salute was intended for him, responded with a similar salute. The stra ger, leaving the building,

Sleepy Man Driven to Make Suggestion

A Hoosier traveling man had a hotel room next to one occupied by two teachers during the teachers' convention. He was very tired and turned in early. But hardly had he closed his eyes when the two teachers came in from the evening session. They discussed it, one of them particularly being endowed with a voice commonly called strident. Finally they finished with the subject and he, thinking they were through with the conversation for the night, turned over again and once more began to think of slumbering. But after a little pause the loud talking began on another theme, namely, the hard life of a teacher. After she had discussed it from all angles she said: "If I only knew where I could succeed I would leave the teaching profession. Now what could I really do as well as I can teach school?"

Before the second teacher could answer her the long-suffering man rose to the occasion. "Madam," he shouted through the wall, "you could be an auctioneer."-Indianapolis News.

Portable Mill Works

Many times in the past we have all wished for a woodworking machine combining many of the features of the mill works, so portable, well balanced and flexible that we could take it to where heavy timbers lie and frame them to our heart's content while they lay where gravity held them. Butch ers are planning their chopping blocks as they stand. Tank and vat makers are framing their heavy timbers as they lie on benches; cutting, splicing, boring and graining on timbers as thick as 12 inches is all done as the timbers lie.—Scientific American.

Meat Is Chief Use for Pure Breds

Animals Marketed Directly Cost Slightly Less to Raise Than Scrubs.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) About 62 per cent of pure-bred live stock is marketed directly for meat purposes. Pure-bred meat animals cost slightly less than scrubs to raise to maturity; pure-bred dairy cattle cost slight-Only about one-half of the pure-bred animals in the country eligible to registration are actually registered. Pure breds are much more profitable to raise than scrubs, and somewhat more so than grades, the degree depending on the proportion of pure blood the grades possess.

About 96 per cent of persons who give the use of pure-bred sires a fair trial stick to the general principle of using them for all classes of stock.

Improving the quality of pure-bred live stock by rigid culling and by selling only worthy animals for breeding purposes is urged and also is being practiced by progressive farmers.

Results of Questionnaire.

These statements are based on the results of a questionnaire inquiry, covering 45 states, conducted by the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. The purpose was to obtain directly from farm ers information on the current trend of the live-stock industry with respect to the quality of stock. An analysis of the detailed replies on 653 report forms of three pages each, supplemented by numerous letters and explanatory comments, shows an unmistakable trend toward the raising of pure-bred ani mals for utility purposes.

Marketing Pure Breds as Meat Animals.

The extent to which pure breds are sold as meat animals is seen in the following figures: Swine, 75.1 per cent; sheep, 62.2 per cent; cattle, 41.8 per cent. The foregoing figures represent the records or estimates of purebred live-stock owners who sell a con siderable proportion of their pure-bred animals for slaughter. The weighted average for all classes of these animals is 62.0 per cent.

The remainder were sold chiefly for breeding purposes. In this connection it may be explained that the majority of persons answering the questionnaire were average progressive farmers rather than professional or especially skilled breeders. Some told of their preference for selling their surplus pure breds only as breeding stock, but such owners were in the minority.

Judging from numerous comments, the reasons for using the market outlet so extensively, as well as selling stock for breeding purposes, were the greater convenience and equally satisfactory returns.

Grass Seed Comes From

Many Different States Where does the grass seed come

Illinois steps out with practically all the red-top seed that supplies the demand in this country and Europe. It is produced down in the southern the state, with southern Iowa and Missouri contributing a small quantity. Illinois is the big red top center.

Kentucky bluegrass doesn't necessarily come from old Kentucky. This seed, main constituent for lawn-grass mixtures in the northern two-thirds of the country, is produced by northern Kentucky, northwestern Missouri and southwestern Iowa for the most part, special machinery having been introduced into the last-named section for harvesting the seed. Meadow lescue or English bluegrass seed is produced in surplus quantities in eastern Kansas and to a much less extent in Missouri.

Kentucky and southern Indiana contribute most of the orchard grass seed. Other much-less-used varieties of grasses are furnished by scattering sections of various states, so that a well-balanced lawn-grass mixture represents considerable territory when it is assembled.

Arizona and California furnish most of the Bermuda grass seed for southern consumption.

Spraying Potato Vines

for Control of Beetle Spraying of potato vines is very necessary if insect damage is to be avoided. Any of the arsenical insecticides will control the striped Colorado potato beetle and the gray blister beetle. The usual spray is 50 gallons of water with 1.5 pounds of paris green, 2 pounds of calcium arsenate or 3 pounds of lead arsenate. If paris green or calcium arsenate is used, an equal quantity of lime should be used, to prevent burning. These poisons are frequently applied in the form of a dust, mixing 1 part of poison with 20 parts of hydrated lime. In a home garden paris green and flour is sometimes used.

Setting Out Raspberry

Raspberry plants may be set out in either fall or spring, spring preferred. Keep them free from weeds by cultivation until late in June, then cease cultivation and let the late weeds grow until the next spring, and cultivate again. The tops should be cut back in early spring before any growth has started, to hip or waist height.

Power for the Farm From Small Stream

Neglected Sources May Be Put to Good Uses.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Small streams frequently are neglected sources of power that may be utilized in generating electricity to light buildings and grounds and possibly to operate a number of small machines, says the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, in Farmers' Bulletin 1430, "Power for the Farm From Small Streams," just published. Electrical equipment on the farm saves time and labor in the household and farm work. To be a sound investment, however, the cost of installation should not be greater than, the benefits obtained would justify. In this respect, the bureau points out by way of caution, farm water-power electric outfits have their limitations.

In the new bulletin an attempt is made to acquaint farmers with the possibilities of developing the power of small streams by converting it into electrical energy. It discusses the uses to which the power can be put. The bulletin gives information that will enable prospective water-power users to avoid unnecessary expense, and explains how to determine the power a stream will supply.

Copies of the bulletin may be had free, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the Department of Agriculture. Washington.

Toad of Great Value on

Farms and in Orchards

We say that life is made up of the little things, yet we are not aware of the value that many little animals are to us. How many of us ever stop to consider the toad? In most instances he is considered just a little nuisance, put here to be in the way just as other harmful animals are. But the next toad you see hopping along, stop and watch him perform. By studying the toad the student will learn that he is of great value to the farmer and orchardist, writes J. W. Recknor, Jr., in the Farm and Ranch.

The tongue of the toad is half an inch long or longer, and he can use it to perfection, too, when it comes to catching flies. I admit that the toad seems to be a very lazy creature hopping about, but that is the very time he is doing his duty. The toad hops about, and when a fly comes near enough, out goes his long tongue in an instant. Mr. Fly is caught and his career, carrying typhoid germs to well people's dining rooms, is stopped.

Mr. Toad is an eater of insects and is valuable to the farmer in his crops. It is estimated that the toad is worth $19 per year to the farmer. If he is worth only half this much, then the toad is a valuable little fellow to us rural people. Toads should be given all the protection possible so their number will increase. Some people allow their children to kill toads, but this should not be. Protect the toad, for he is our good little friend.

Because of reports of serious damage to strawberries and blackberries in 1924, the entomologists of the New York State agricultural experiment station at Geneva gave the following directions for controlling this insect.

For quick results an inexpensive poison bait is recommended, either broadcast in the field or, in the case of small fruits, sprinkled about the bases of the plants. The following formula will provide enough material for five acres:

Bran, 20 pounds: paris green, one pound; cheap sirup, two quarts; three lemons and three and one-half gallons of water. The bran and paris green are mixed dry. The juice of the lemons is squeezed into the water and the peel and pulp chopped to fine bits and added to the water. The sirup is then dissolved in the water and fruit mixture and the liquid stirred into the bran thoroughly in order to dampen it evenly. If a smaller quantity is wanted, the amounts of the different ingredients may be reduced proportionately. It is recommended that the poison bait be applied in the evening, because the cutworms are night feeders and the bat will "us be in a fresher condition n if applied earlier in the day.

"Look here," Jim continued, "Dad told you to mind me while he was gone And he told me to look out you didn't do some fool trick and get hurt or killed. So if I call you, you drop what you're doing and come. Get that: Promise?"

This was after supper and the boys did not meet again that night. Next morning John did not answer the breakfast bell. His father was summoned, and the police set to work-all to no end. The only word or trace of John was the scrawl he had left in his room: "I told Jim he'd have to call a long way if he wanted me to come, and I don't know as I'll come then." And even when, as Judge James Carter, Jim had become famous as the "children's judge," he was still searching for John. Then one day a friend in New York telegraphed that a man about John's age had been picked up unconscious after a street accident-too injured about the face for recognition, but bearing papers that seemed to identify him was John II. Carter.

Jim was immensely stirred. Again and again clues had led him to some John Carter-always to the wrong one. long distance: "John Carter, you come But "H," he said to himself. "John H. Carter!" And he swiftly put his desk in order that he might start at once for New York.

The woman's story was a familiar one, but hard for Jim to hear just at that moment. Her boy Pete and his older brother Jerry couldn't get along. Jerry meant well, but was rough and bossy-thought he had to take his father's place. And Pete had grown impudent-even at the office where he worked-and yesterday the boss had given him the sack. Now things at home were worse than ever. Wouldn't the judge help?

Jim explained that he was just starting for New York but would take the matter up at once on his return.

The woman burst into tears. "You'll be too late! Pete's fixin' to run off. I come on a bunch of his clothes tied up. It'll be tonight, and I'm afraid

It is in this country of the ancient Mayas, Aztecs and Incas' that the most abundant evidence has been found of early cultivation.

"Belles-Lettres"

Formerly the expression "Belles Lettres" was sometimes used as the equivalent to the humanities, but it is now applied rather vaguely to literary works of style, taste and imagination -in other words, "polite literature." The term has no recorded use in English before 1710, when it was used by Swift in the Tatler.

U. S. BOAT SINKS; 4 DEAD, 14 MISSING

Fifty Persons Hurled Into Mississippi When Craft Turns Over.

Memphis, Tenn.—Four excursionists are known to be dead and fourteen are missing as a result of the capsizing of the United States government steamer Norman in the Mississippi river 16 miles south of Memphis. The survivors arrived here on board the steamer Mis-

The Norman sank as it was returning from Cow island with a party of engineers here attending the convention of the Mid-South Association of Engineers. It was moving along smoothly, according to survivors, when it suddenly began rocking from side to side. This continued for perhaps five minutes, when it careened far over, and failed to recover. Three minutes later the vessel had virtually gone from sight.

Two bodies were recovered later. They were those of:

neering department of the University of Mississippi.

Maj. W. M. Gardner, engineer corps of the United States army.

The other two known to have been drowned, but whose bodies were not found, are:

Mrs. Walter G. Kirkpatrick, wife of Professor Kirkpatrick.

Mrs. J. F. Dorroh, wife of the dean of the engineering department of the University of Mississippi.

The names of those who are missing are: C. E. Shearer, Memphis; E. H. Powser, Memphis; Paul H. Norcross, Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Bosard and son, Memphis; Mrs. Lydia Hiddinger, Memphis; Maj. Charles Miller, Little Rock, Ark.; G. L. Anderson, Memphis; W. M. Hammon, Memphis; Roy Thompson, Memphis, member of the crew; Jack Cothran, Memphis, engineer on the Norman; Will Moore, member of the crew; Tom Plunkett, member of the crew.

The steamer, a 150-foot government vessel, had 50 persons on board. The Norman and its sister ship, the Choctaw, had been given over by the government to convey delegates to the convention to an outing for the day at Cow Island bend.

Just opposite Josie Harris island the vessel ran into an extremely swift current and got into trouble.

As the boat continued to list persons on board began to run from one side to the other in an effort to remain on the high side of the boat. This added to the swaying of the vessel so that finally she careened so far that she could not recover and sank.

Captain Fenton said that before leaving Memphis he had arranged for life preservers to be placed on top of the boat and not tied. When the boat turned over these life preservers were thrown into the water. Captain Fenton said that without a doubt some owed their lives to the fact that they could grasp these life preservers and remain affoat until the motor boat came along.

When the supply of life preservers was exhausted, passengers tore away screen doors and planks to help keep

There was no explosion when the boat sank, the survivors said. Jack Cothran, engineer, turned off the fuel oil under the boilers when the boat began to misbehave.

President's Economy to Result in Tax Reduction.

Washington. — President Coolidge's drive for economy on federal expenditures will result in another substantial cut in the annual budget. He hopes the reduction will be as great as $300,-000,000, making total estimates to be submitted to the next congress around $3,000,000,000.

Present budget estimates for the year beginning next June 30 are for $3,267,000,000, exclusive of the Post-Office department, but including public debt requirements. These appropriations already have been made.

The treasury soon can supply the budget with additional figures as to the probable surplus for the current fiscal year, a surplus that now promises to be about $100,000,000. It likewise will be in a position to forecast more definitely the receipts that may be counted on from taxes in the fiscal year beginning July 1. The treasury already counts on a cut of about $60, 000,000 in expenditures through additional retirement of war bonds.

The question of tax reduction is intimately connected with the surplus. Unofficial estimates now indicate that the total volume of tax receipts may pe cut by 12 per cent. The method will be determined by congress, but Secretary Mellon has suggested reduction of surtaxes and elimination of, or material reduction in, the rates on estates

GARY SEES GOOD TIMES FOR U. S.

Declares Eusiness Is Booming, but Taxes Are Too High.

Chicago.-When the steel mills drone their chant of industry night and day, day in and day out, Elbert H. Gary says, all is well with the land, the people are prosperous and content, business is booming along and there is no reason why any man may not be what he himself remains-"a conservative optimist."

Talking in terms of bookings and shipments and balances, steel and tubing and tinplate, the chairman of the board of the United States Steel corporation yet managed to get into his pronouncements that business is strong and healthy and vigorous; that there is nov plenty of reason for expecting it to continue so, perhaps to get even better.

Mr. Gary, perhaps the highest authority in the country on business and economic conditions, was in Chicago for the corner stone laying for the building he is giving to Northwestern university. During the day he made an inspection trip over the far-flung properties of the steel industry. He asserted he found conditions every where looking up.

"I found most of our properties running pretty near to full capacity," he "The Gary mills and plants and those down in Birmingham, Ala., are running full sway. The South Chicago plants are running about 90 per cent of capacity. Some of our eastern mills also are running a little below what they can do. But that, all things considered, is nothing to worry about.

"Yes, steel is a pretty good business barometer. I will say that since it is a basic industry, its conditions reflect the general industrial situation. Thus when the steel mills keep rolling we may know that conditions all around are good.

"Indications are that business in the country is strong, healthy and vigorous, and we may expect it so to continue. And this in spite of the fact that some things are not quite satisfactory. One of the chief troubles is taxes. Taxes are too high, much too high, all the taxes-national, state and local.

"Another thing," he continued, "is building costs. Building costs are still too high-much too high.

"But ...ll these things will adjust... themselves. On the whole everything looks very bright, and I think I may say that I remain a conservative opti-

CHAPTER I

(W. N. U. Service)

He had gone to London the moment he was out of uniform, and he had gone there for a reason typical to him. For most Americans a single track success is an inspiration of life; there is a raw meat satisfaction in hewing to the line until some tree falls and also an instinct for playing the latest game. If it is money-making, or trade, or industrialism or production-efficiency, the rank and file go panting after It until some one rings for the undertaker. I have always thought that the source of the imagination which was responsible for Peter DeWolfe's tastes, policy and conduct was most difficult to uncover. The true sense of play, not only applied to play but to all the endeavors of life, even those which are usually accounted grim-like war and marriage—is a rare flower to bloom on the American soil; it is still more rare a blossom to find growing in a family tree rooted, as Peter's was rooted, in a bed of money and only fertilized by that humdrum conventional pretense of our large cities which at latest accounts is still giving many persons the same old pale glories. This rare flower bloomed in Peter and saved him from doing the commonplaces with himself which rich young men who have become orphaned bachelors usually do. It made Peter a great deal more like those individuals, rare enough even abroad—the whimsical Englishman, the adventurous Frenchman, the humorous Spaniard and the practical Russian, who, though they be the white crows of their respective flocks, exceed in numbers the Americans who value full living above that rather uninteresting and easy prize which is called "Success."

Peter took an interest in living. The common run of bachelors who are provided amply with millions accept the alternative of going to the devil or going to business; DeWolfe's imagination came to his rescue and provided him with a third choice which, in his quiet way, he seized about the time he left college. . It was to live for the sake

To some this might have meant selfindulgence; to Peter it meant an indulgence of mankind. To some it might have meant fads and whims, such as hunting big game from airplanes at the source of the Nile; Peter would do that very thing, perhaps, but it was an incident not half as interesting to him as an oil field he developed in Texas or a settlement house he promoted in New York. He kept himself as a very neat, well-cleaned slate upon which life could write if it wished; if it failed to do so Peter wrote on it a little himself-enough to keep himself useful. The same man who invented the DeWolfe milimeter also set down from time to time some charming verses, and the public knows at least one short lyric from the "Leaves of Argonne" which he wrote in the hospital before his promotion to

Dark skin, blue eyes, thin sensitive lips, the appearance of one well bathed In ice-cold water, the flexible lean waist of a good horseman, the long muscular fingers of a good tennis player who had not lost the delicacy of touch which made him something less than a distinguished performer upon a cellothese were the outward introductions which made that particularly admirable little group of British gentlemen officers find his acquaintance so quickly.

Eversby Benham of the R. A. F. must bear the blame for the months in which DeWolfe found his great adventure at a time when to Peter adventure had become dull beyond words and the mind-image of himself sitting on a New York park bench, surrounded by engaging little foreign brats, listening to a hurdy-gurdy in the summer dusk, was the most exciting and delicious picture conjurable from his resourceful imagination of what a wonderful moment of life after a whirl with war could be. For it was Benham, who only later went home to the ple." office of the air ministry, and who has since distinguished himself in the development of civil-flying, who first steered the young American across the path of Brena Selcoss.

"Are you going back?" said Benham. "Home," said DeWolfe, with an attempt to say the word without senti-

"Red Cross ladies, Waacs, beautiful ham. high caste Parisiennes and even the charming daughter of your what'shis-name at the peace conference and still a bachelor! By the by, De-Wolfe, what happened to your lady with the gorgeous arms at that flubby little cafe on the south bank of the

"An engaging goddess," said De Wolfe. "She is, I believe, a petticoat buyer. She tried to convert me into the Methodist faith. Those beautiful arms are for the neck of some Y. M. C. A. man with glasses and a tickling cough. She borrowed thirty francs from me and then went of to see a daughter of hers who is driving an ambulance near Coblentz."

"You are well armored, Peter," Benham had said, gazing with a reflective and perhaps mischievous smile across tilled squares and wisp-armed trees try."

and thin mists of dusk. "By the by, I ! say, doesn't this landscape remind one of Corot's paintings?"

DeWolfe grinned. "What would make you fall in love vith a woman?" asked Benham.

"Almost anything," Peter replied. "But that's not the problem; the problem is what will prevent a man falling

"You're saying that any womanthat is, with the thing you Americans call a come-on, good or bad—may make a man fall in love with her?"

"I was saying that we are all hypocrites. Such a woman would touch us all-affect any of us-me, for instance. We are made ready by a wise nature. 'Stand by for love,' she says, and youth stands by, Benham. But what's the use, if that's all? Life is a long pull. No dimpled chin should be allowed to turn the tide. No discourse of brilliance chattered off like a disk record in a conservatory. No nosefull of the faint odor of violets nor moonlight on a bare shoulder nor a rating of the old man. That's what I mean. That's why most men marry; but I am hardened by too many inspections of dimpled chins.'

"From a discreet distance?" "Exactly."

"You want more than that pull of the moment or the month."

"To make me give up my own quarters in New York where the sun comes in upon my bare ankles and my coffee, and my Jap brings the newspaper and the cigarettes? I should be glad to say so!"

"You should try Brena Selcoss."

"Who is she?" asked Peter carelessly, as he tried his arm out of its bandage sling.

"You like the name?" "I confess—"

"Of course-so many names of women—just the names—give a man a thrill. Most extraordinary! She's an American and—' He paused.

"Well, what?" asked DeWolfe. "A puzzle," said Benham. "But then you are not interested in women." "To tell the whole truth, they are my only interest except food," Peter said. "The devil of it is that if a man saw ten thousand of 'em he didn't want and couldn't love he'd always expect year after year until he was ninety that the first over the thousand would be the one. Well, that's what leads us on. We all say, 'No, thank you,' when the dish is passed, but we all look to see every last piece on the dish just the same.'

"Brena Selcoss is a friend of my sister," said Benham. "I must say she takes the breath out of me. It's that queer combination of beautiful fresh youth with the flavor of all the guile and conspiracy of the ages. She's a Saint Cecilia or a Lucrezia Borgia. But that's not bothering my mother."

What bothers her?' "Funny thing. We don't know who she is. From Texas, I believe. With some money. But why does a girl from the United States come down to Beaconshire Heath and buy a cottage next to our place and live in a garden and stay out of London and read lying flat on the grass and see nobody and evade all questions? And the look in

"What look?" asked DeWolfe in the hush.

"Fear," said Benham. "Fear?"

"Yes, fear. And besides there is something about her that tells a person that she is waiting-marking time -treading water-staring out over life -just like a watcher on the shore stares out across the empty sea."

"Maybe she's thinking of an ice cream soda."

"There's nothing of that kind of thing in her," the British officer replied with positiveness. "Your ice cream soda and millinery and lookingglass lady has a personality of a pink color. Brena Selcoss is the color of firelight on the walls of an old tem-

"You might go on to say that she gives the impression of an Inca princess. Some dried mummy from the sands of a prehistoric citadel. Bathed in some magic liquid, her limbs expanded to the lovely contour of girlhood, her face warmed with a renewed coursing of spirited blood." "You've seen her!" exclaimed Ben-

"My dear fellow, I've never seen her; but I confess that as you talk about her I feel a little as if I had known her-long ago." Benham said, "Perhaps you could lift the cover—"

He stopped suddenly. "And I'd like to have you meet Muriel, too. She's a very decent sort of sister. I've a mind to give you a letter to my mother and send you over the Channel to loaf around in flannels at our place in the country."

"I'm leaving Brest tomorrow night on a transport. Sorry.'

"Oh!" "Well, I said nothing about it." "Afraid of farewell dinners?" Peter smiled.

"Home," said he. "Bring your sister over to America. She'll probably the flat fields of France with their think it a jolly little unfinished coun-

Benham clasped DeWolfe's hand and vawned: he had seen the American covered from head to foot with blood out of his own arteries when Peter had brought him in with the aid of an artillery horse. It was an intimacy not to be befouled with demonstrations.

"So' long." said DeWolfe.

He climbed down from the broken wall of the house where the English man had been billeted and with a nod of farewell walked away, leaving Ben ham perched there—a black figure as if cut out of black cardboard pasted on the sunset glories of the skyline.

He walked a hundred paces and stopped. He looked at a group of peasant children bringing in fagots, but laughing and jostling each other as if it were a game. Childhood had been untouched. In one of the little rubble and plaster sheds a new-born calf was bawling, and yet in Paris, as he reflected, serious men were discuss ing the future of the world exactly as if they could touch or affect its fundamental nature.

He walked on. The trees trained against the high wall spread their branches like fans, edged at the tips with the pink blossoms of a new year, symbolic of the eternal round of promise, fruit and decay.

"It goes so soon," said DeWolfe aloud, and this voice which spoke was just as if some old friend had given him counsel as they strolled together in the dusk. He turned.

The Englishman waved to him from the wall and held one arm aloft in a gesture of farewell; Peter could see every finger on his hand as if they all were painted in sepia on the velvety gold of the sky.

"By the by," called Benham, "the strange lady is half a Greek. I say! Can you hear? Her father was a banished patriot-a fighting professor of chemistry or something."

Peter smiled and waved his hand. He turned the corner of the wall and stepped into the cobbled street where the endless wagons of some French artillery maneuver were rumbling deeper into the ruts of War worn in the ancient stones.

 Only at nine that evening did he hear more. Benham called him by the service wire of the signal corps.

"Saying good-by, that's all," said the Englishman, lying glibly. "Good luck. And I forgot to say that her mother was Irish."

"Send me that letter to your family, care of the American port officer at Boulogne," said Peter calmly after a moment in which Benham wondered whether the line had been cut off. "I'm off for England tomorrow."

He put his cigarette down and allowed it to burn the edge of the table, staring at the wall with its maps and blue-prints, his eyes full of wonder.

This explains, in part, why the reason for his going to London was typical of Peter DeWolfe.

CHAPTER II

Muriel Benham was savagely a woman. She conceived womăn as a species as distinct from males as flora is distinct from fauna. The acquisition by women of the right to vote had been the occasion for mourning, as Peter found out before Mrs. Austin Benham had beamed through two meals, first upon her guest and then upon her lovely daughter.

The widow of Austin, as DeWolfe discovered after a week of agreeable neglect of the calendar, was a true beamer. She did not beam with the insincere beam of affectation, but with the beam of an expansive nature oozing good will and demonstrativeness through the crevices it could find in the walls of a life which was like a vessel of conventionality, containing, according to all the traditions of her husband's family, a liquor of precious | father had given attention to clothes; | four deans and prebendaries.

quality, not to be spent freely. She | the hunter's-pink riding coat that still not because she agreed with her but because, not daring to voice an opinion, she could still love her daughter for being so healthy and so irreproach-

Muriel considered berself as dedia woman, and being a woman meant that her brown hair must be made attractive and stable for tennis—a game which she executed with a good deal of dash, in a costume designed to keep freckles off a milk-white skin. Even her forearms were covered in the game she took from DeWolfe, who made rather a botch of his unpracticed play, because just as it was a womanly woman's duty to be well exercised and in fine condition for the market, so also was it her duty to be milk-white in an evening dress. The same thought made her appear before Peter in the hedge-walled garden before breakfast clad in a part wispy and part fluffy gown, with a basket of roses hung on one elbow and flower scissors in the other hand.

"You do all things so well," said Peter with a great delight filling his being. "There is a thoroughness in your method which positively upsets me. I looked at the library in your study and as far as I can see you have spent your twenty years collecting, among others, books on how to do things—how to ride a horse, how to play golf, how to knit, how to cast a fly, how to speak Italian, how to grow roses, and who knows what else."

The English girl was sincerely grateful to Peter. She said: "To know the way, to practice the methods-these are the sure steps toward results; but you must not think I take myself too seriously, as my brother probably told you. I think it is all as nothing compared to the skill of being a womana fit woman-a woman whose one aim is to be a woman.'

"You have attained it," said Peter, a little light dancing in his eyes under his heavy brows as fireflies sparkle behind a hedge.

The girl tossed the ball up and caught it in her white skirt spread from knee to knee as she sat crosslegged upon the edge of the Benhams' This lawn began again after the interruption of the square tennis court and rolled gently down to a line of trees at the bottom of the hill that half hides the little town of Becon with its nestling red brick houses with their chimney pots and roofs tempered by the smoke of coals on home fires. They lived peaceably together without any bold assertions of individuality, none of them doing any outrage to the countryside, as Peter, contrasting it with an American town, had said. to live there." Beyond the village were the chalk downs where grass was light green and the heather a deeper color, and narrow roads were as white as the opportunity to hear a name he had marks of crayon, and trees standing alone were like feathery plumes stuck here and there into the rolling country by some giant hand. Somewhere, still further on, was the sea into which the bright sky fell like a blue back curtain flecked with clouds of feathery white.

Peter, with half-closed eyes, gazed, out across this magnificence of quiet space toward the distant backbone of a chalk ridge where ancient Britons once drove their cattle into caves and Druid priests had once held solemn rites. He was quite unconscious of Muriel's attention fixed upon him somewhat as a faithful dog watches a master; he had been in many of his own dreams in these ten days and might well be forgiven for failing to notice that something of violence was going on within this English girl whose outlines, like those of a volcano, were still clear and cold against the sky, exposing nothing of the fires and steam which may blow their surroundings into fragments.

The most that Muriel had ever said was that Peter was one of the "nice Americans," a patronizing compliment which had made him tell the girl and her mother that he was gratified at that judgment expressed by "the better type of English." He did not know that by the processes within the Benham sister's lovely head, she had weighed carefully his physical appearance ,noting his high bronzed forehead, his straight nose, his lean hard cheeks and the thin judicial lips which had been an inheritance of the family ever since Justice DeWolfe had been painted by Copley. She had judged him as one would judge an animal, and satisfied, had methodically passed on to his

Peter's clothes are famous for their charming incorrectness. No one quite knows how he succeeds in expressing through some expensively fashionable and unimaginative tailor so much of his own brand of distinction in dress. Evening clothes or bathwrap, major's uniform or lounging flannels, it is always the same; Peter's clothes and Peter are one. An envious broker in New York named Moore once said that Peter's clothes even expressed Peter's moods-they could be limp, soft and contented in his idleness; they could stiffen into fine dignity with a turn of his thought. Muriel's believed in new things and in a new hangs in the hall closet in Beconshire world, but she beamed upon Muriel | Heath reminds his successors of the dominant, rare-roast-beef personality of Sir Austin. His daughter, like other women who are in the profession of being women, gave importance to the decorative qualities of a male; she only forgot about Peter's face and figcated by duty and adaptability to being ure and clothes when they had been swallowed by his complete whole—a whole which defied her methodical judgment and made her eyes swim and began to turn within her heart and body the elementary machinery that two hundred years of Benham tradition had kept locked in neutral.

> "Peter, I saw you before breakfast," she said. "From my window."

> "You saw me?" he said. "Why didn't you call to me and say one of your cheery good mornings?"

She leaned so close that he could catch the faint aroma of the lavender which Mrs. Benham, with a beaming face, sprinkled in the drawers. She said, "Because I was waiting to see what you were doing.'

"What was I doing?" said Peter. "The telescope-father's telescope." "Oh yes-the telescope," repeated Peter, as if he had been accused of stealing the squeaky old glass. "I did have the telescope, didn't I?"

He was thinking that one could not very well tell hosts like these two women who had treated him as if he were the owner of the estate and of the old stone house and even quaint Spode coffee cups which came on at breakfast, that he had come to Beconshire not to see them. He was thinking that if they had not chosen to mention an acquaintance other than the rather stiff and dull and correct persons who had come to tea almost every afternoon and three or four times to dinners, saved by the Chateau Yquem graciously left by Sir Austin as a legacy in the wine cellar, he could not very well mention this acquaintance. Furthermore he had begun to feel that Muriel in some strange manner of her own had created an atmosphere of a proprietress without any other intimacy than calling him Peter and, upon one occasion, dressing a cut of a hawthorn on the back of his hand with a peculiar tenderness mixed with all the care of procedure that one can find in "What to Do in an Emergency." He shrank from making the one inquiry he would have wished to make.

He now had a chance to make this inquiry, because Muriel said: "You were standing there under that beech tree. I thought-"

"What did you think?"

"That you were looking through the glass across the fields toward that place under the big trees-the place we call the Curate's because one used

Peter might have spoken then to ask who now occupied the little gabled such things as perfumes, wines and house with its guardian trees. It was expensive silks. But that is not all. not heard since he had heard it from Colonel Benham's lips; Peter's characteristic perversity that often made him allow life to set its own pace and bring events at its own whim, added at this moment to his disinclination to disclose one of his reasons for idling under the Benhams' roof. It prevented him from speaking. The sun was warm, there was a fatalistic assurance that he would hear the name soon enough, and there was the possibility that a look of pain would come into Muriel's face and he would hurt a girl for whom he had acquired a goodnatured, companionable and almost paternal affection.

He only smiled, and Muriel's pink fingers being near upon the glass, he touched them 'lightly. After a long pause, he said: "I was looking around the country."

"I do not believe you," the girl said, jumping up with startling suddenness. "Where are you going?" he asked. "Into the house. I have a-head-

Cure for Blisters

Blisters, caused by the shoe rubbing the foot, develop into a real painful alcer if they are not properly treated, Mr. Mann of Anytown learned.

If pricked, some disinfectant should be applied immediately. The best way to let the water out is to pass a bit of vaseline thread through the blister. When the blister is on the sole of the foot where the skin is thick, take

The blister will be gone, Blisters on the hand may be pricked with a needle and then covered with a layer of collodion one ounce, castor oil eight grains; soft turpentine eight grains. Two or three coats are re quired.

Lovely Asiatic Spot Land of Deep Mystery

The bay of Along, extending for 60 miles along the coast of northern Tongking, is said to be one of the most beautiful spots in Asia. It is a region of mystery and silence, chiefly inhabited by troops of monkeys, wild sheep and red eagles, according to Asia Magazine.

Until recently the countless islands offered a favorite hiding place for Chinese pirates, who preyed on coastal trade. Chinese junks and sampans belonging to fisher folk ply through the secluded waters among the glant rocks, which emerge like summits of submerged mountains, carved by wind and wave into incredibly fantastic shapes.

Tongking and Annam, since 1844 under a French protectorate, officially shook off the Chinese yoke in the Fifteenth century, though tribute was irregularly paid to Peking as late as the French occupation.
