The United States Marine Band, "The President's Own," admittedly the finest organization of its kind in the world, will give two concerts in South Haven Friday, October 16, tomorrow. Both concerts will be at the Casino, beginning at 2:30 p. m. central standard time. South Haven is the smallest city in which this band has played in the last five years, at least. This limit might be extended to twelve years, for there was a period of seven years in which this superb musical organization did not play outside of Washington, and it is doubtful if in the tours prior to that period it had visited any city as small as South Haven. In order that school children may enjoy the delight afforded by a Marine Band concert, they will be admitted at the afternoon concert for 25 cents. Many schools will close for the afternoon to permit the children to attend, while other schools will excuse those wishing to attend the concert. Surely this is a wonderful opportunity for the children of this section.

Over six hundred Dowagiac residents found to their satisfaction what a "Womanless Marriage" was like, when they at. tended the play by that name at the Beckwith Theatre. The show was staged for the benefit of the Ladies Aid and a good sum was realized from the production.

Obituary

Elijah Ampey, son of Isom and Mary Ampey, was born on their farm near Bloomingdale, Mich., April 26, 1871 and departed this life Oct. 4, 1925 at the age of 54 years, 5 months and 8 days.

He was united in marriage to Almeda Burnett of Hartman in December, 1900.

She having passed away in February 1911 he was again united in marriage to Miss Celia Brown of Arlington January 14, 1914, with whom he has lived on his farm until he was taken to the hospital in Kalamazoo where he passed away after a few days illness.

His entire life was spent among his boyhood friends and neighbors. He united with the Baptist church in Gobles where he was an active work for several years, giving up the work later. But when he knew the end was nearing he asked for scripture reading and prayer and earnestly called upon God for forgiveness of sins and said with much reverence, "not my will but thine, Oh Lord, be done.

He leaves to mourn their loss: his wife, his aged mother, his twin brother, Elisha, two sisters, Mrs. Alice Scruggs of Evanston, Ill. and Mrs Phena Sims of Chicago, Ill., several nieces and nephews, several cousins and a host of friends.

Funeral was held from the Baptist church Tuesday and the crowded church bespoke the esteem in which he was held.

CHOOSING A WIFE

THERE was an article in the paper this evening on "Choosing a Wife." I didn't read it, for I am not looking for a wife, being already happily stocked up for life I hope, but I have good many ideas on the subject if I should ever get to the point of need.

If you buy a suit of clothes that doesn't fit or that you don't like, you can give it to the janitor, or donate it to the missionary society to go into the barrel that the ladies of the church are getting ready to send away at Christmas time, or sell it at the annual sorority rummage sale. An unsatisfactory automobile, or house dog can be disposed of. A wife, even with our present divorce laws, is rather a permanent possession and so should be chosen carefully.

My grandmother used to say when giving advice to her grandsons which they seldom asked for and never took, that before the negotiations were actually completed in possessing oneself of a wife, it was wisest to see all the faults and weaknesses possible. After marriage one should close his eyes and be blind to anything that suggested imperfection. Quite the opposite is frequently the case. One uses his head when he buys a horse or a motor car. He wants to know something of the pedigree of the horse or the internal construction of mayor. The duke of York was the the car; he isn't carried away by the results of careful currying on the one hand or skillful painting on the other.

With a wife it is too often a matter of sentiment or emotion, of passing fancy for an attractive exterior—for careful currying and skillful painting as it were. He doesn't stop to consider that it is going to be difficult to dispose of her if she proves unsatisfactory-when spavins develop or the coat grows rough, or the paint scales. Age may make a difference.

Men and women don't change much excepting in appearance.

Curtis had been showing a good deal of attention to Lizzie Chamberlain ever since we were in high school together. We all thought they were engaged and would be married. Then. suddenly things between them seemed

"What's the matter with you and Lizzie?" I asked one day, for we had been very good friends.

"She's a wonderful girl in some ways," he answered, "and I'm fond of her. I've taken time to think a little, however. I'm over-fastidious, I know. attention to dress, and regularity.

when we're going places, her hair's untidy, her hands are seldom nice, she's scarcely ever hooked up. I'm not going to change much and she isn't. I could overlook her faults for a while, but in time they would irritate me. We'd be unhappy. A man may have to live with his wife fifty years

It's a thought well worth considering. (Copyright, by W. G. Chapman)

Annual Oyster Feast Held by English Town

The oyster feast at Colchester, England, which is held on October 21, dates back centuries and centuries, in fact, to the time of the ancient Britons.

Julius Caesar, after his conquest of the eastern counties of England, founded a town on the site of the present Colchester, and the export of oysters to Rome became the chief industry. During the reign of Richard (1193), the monarch granted a charter to the citizens giving them the sole right for oyster fishing off a large part of the coast. In order to keep the size of the oysters up to standard, a silver oyster was cast, which now reposes in the town hall, and it is illegal to sell them smaller than the model.

As the fame of Colchester's oysters spread, it became customary to invite well-known people from all over the country. The ceremony takes place at the town hall, at the expense of the guest of honor last year, which witnessed an epoch-making event. For the first time in Colchester's history the feast was presided over by a lady, for the city's civic head was a mayoress.

Fame

Fame is not futile. It is the pass ing salute to exceptional ability. The idea of every youth should be fame, fairly earned—in competition with others. The Olympic games of today typify to me the finest type of competition-the ideal of human contest and adventure. The better man, working to fit himself as best he can beforehand, wins. And such fame is worth while and respectable—Chauncey M. Depew, in International-Cosmopolitan

Lore for Dog-Owners

TRAINING A DOG BY COMMON SENSE

The Luckless Puppy Only Cowered Lower and Turned His Frightened Head Piteously From Side to Side.

LD MAN NEGLEY stopped his lawnmower to listen to a sound (or rather a series of sounds) that arose above its cheery whirr.

A man was bellowing wrathfully, somewhere on the far side of the fence which parted the Veiler yard from the grounds of Colonel Prouse, on Vine street. Through his roars of anger came now the sharp yelp of a dog in pain and fright.

Old Man Negley's gray brows puckered. He left his work and strode to the fence, peering over its top.

There, on the grassplot, stood old Colonel Prouse, towering over a little dog that cowered quiveringly at

"Lie down!" bawled the colonel, in a voice that would have traveled a

"Excuse me, colonel," called Old Man Negley, across the fence, and tryfing to keep his voice reasonably civil. "Excuse me for mentioning it, but there are better ways for a man to show how inferior he is to his own dog than by kicking him. You'll know that when you cool down. Likewise, if you don't mind my saying so, a man who can't train his own temper can't hope to train a dog. The min aute you loose control of yourself you Hose control of your dog. I thought you might like to know. That pup of yours is too good to be spoiled forever, just for the fun of getting mad

"The pup's worthless!" fumed the colonel. "He's a born fool. I can't even kick sense into his useless carcass. He-

"Didn't you tell me once, sir, about training a regiment of raw recruits for the Spanish war?" respectfully asked the old man.

"Yep," said the colonel, "and they were the best-trained regiment of civilians at Chattanooga, if I do say so. But what's that got to do with-

"With that poor cowed whimpering puppy?" supplemented Old Man Neglley. "Only this much: Did you kick those recruits and scream and swear at them and threaten to kill them, the first time or two they were ever on the parade ground?"

The colonel glowered and said nothdig.

"If you had," went on the old man, "You'd not only have been cashiered from the army, but you'd have made that whole regiment as worthless as you're trying to make that pup.

"It would have been more sensible to kick the recruits and get into a babyish rage at them. Because they would have had sense enough to make allowances. Besides, there would have been some redress for them.

"But there isn't any redress for your dog. You're his god. You have power of life and death over him. You can torture him or scare him into fits. He can't save himself and nobody can save him. That's a pretty big responsibility, when you come to look at it in the right way, isn't it, sir?"

"The recruits were grown men, with grown men's brains. This puppy is only a baby. He has baby brains. He isn't a Daniel Webster. He is more anxious to learn things than you are anxious to teach them to him. "Start him right and handle him right and there's almost nothing you couldn't teach him. But when you scare him half to death and kick him, his baby brains has only just room enough in it to know he's in awful danger. "That pretty little grandchild of yours, now-the one who started come home the first day and told you the teacher had begun her education by losing her temper at her and had ended up by screaming and swearing at her and by kicking her in the head?

"The child would have done mighty little learning, with a teacher like that, wouldn't she? Well, can you expect a six-month puppy to have more sense or to learn quicker than a sixyear-old child? If you granddaughter couldn't learn her alphabet by being kicked in the head, how can you expect a puppy to learn to lie down or to shake hands by that same kind of teaching?

"You could keep your temper with grown men. You could keep it because there'd have been a comeback and disgrace and failure if you lost it. You could keep from kicking men. If you could do that, you can keep from kicking a helpless puppy that loves you and that wants to please you.

"A puppy is only a baby. He has to learn a strange language and at the same time to learn the law and learn tricks. It's a big order. By patience and by gentleness and firmness and by common sense he can be taught all those things; a lot quicker than we humans could. His lessons could be made a jolly romp for him. You've been making them a horror. No wonder he doesn't get anywhere with "The only way to train a dog is this: First teach him to obey you. He's glad to do it, if you go at the business right. Then start in with other things you want him to learn.

"The minute he gets confused or scared, change the lesson into a romp or else give him some tidbit to eat. nen, later, start the same lesson over again. always stopping when he gets confused.

"Go step by step. Take your time. In a very little while you'll find he's enjoying it and that he's learning as fast as you can teach him. It'll pay in the long run.

"If you'd like me to train that pup to do a few simple tricks and a few necessary things, I'll drop around tomorrow afternoon, when my work's done, and begin his education."

The colonel was red and frowning. But presently he blurted:

"I suppose you're right. Maybe it is I who am the fool, and not the puppy. Come around. I'd-I'd like to watch vou do it."

"Good!" approved Old Man Negley. 'Tomorrow afternoon. Till then, don't try to make him do anything in the way of learning. Be gentle with him. Take him for a walk. Feed him bits of animal crackers. Make him forget he's so afraid of you. Maybe we'll be in time to save him from being cowed for good. There's nothing that's such a give-away to the rottenness of a man as his cowed dog.

"Not that I believe in spoiling a dog or giving him his own way. All my dogs have to mind me, and mind me on the jump. But they can be taught to do it by love better than by boot-

Harvest Mouse Small but Clever "Beastie"

The harvest mouse which is to be found in the British grain fields is an odd and interesting little follow, and very capable in his own humble way. He is an expert nest-builder, a gymnast that can run down a corn stem with the help of its grasping tail, a skilled fly-fisher—withal a thrifty character with a habit of storing grain. Then it is fortunate in finding winter harborage in stacks. It is little in our thoughts in winter, or, indeed, in summer either, since it is so small and swift that it escapes notice, in spite of the bright fawn of its top coat. But now and then it is found in winter, asleep in a bird's nest. There is evidence that at times the mice will make homes for themselves, as they have been found sleeping among reeds in warbler-like nests cunningly placed at a height safe from school last week. Tainted Cream Can Dangerous

Flavors of Kerosene, Gasoline, Etc., Will Spoil Whole Churning.

The price paid for cream depends upon what the creamery can sell the butter for plus a reasonable profit. Butter is sold on the large markets according to qualify. In order to make a good quality of butter, a butter-maker must have good quality gream. First-grade butter cannot be made out of all cream received at the creamer, because some of the cream will be tainted with onion, kerosene, gasoline and other flavors. Now if a firm can get 45 cents a pound for good butter, 20 cents a pound for onion butter and only grease prices for kerosene and gasoline butter, you can readily see the result. The price paid for all butterfat will depend upon the percentage of each kind of bum cream that is received. Let us consider kerosene and gasoline tainted cream and see if the producer is not losing money. Oil Taints All Cream.

A slight trace of oil in a cream can will taint all the cream that it comes in contact with, which usually is an entire churning. An average churning in most plants is 1,000 pounds of butter, or a value of $450 with butter at 45 cents per pound. A 5-gallon can of cream of an average test with butterfat at 40 cents, will bring $4.80. Now if this 5-gallon can of cream is tainted with kerosene or gasoline, it will ruin the $450 churning, and that butter will have to be disposed of at grease prices. You can readily see that there is a large financial loss and the producer pays the bill.

Big Churning Lost. One of the dairy inspectors happened to be in a cream station in eastern Colorado a short time ago when a producer delivered a 10-gallon can of cream. The producer cautioned the cream station operator to be sure and wash the can thoroughly, as he was going to take home some gasoline in the can. Another inspector reported that he was in a Denver plant and saw a 1.200-pound churning of kerosene butter. It is impossible to thoroughly cleanse a can after it has been filled with oil. You may think you can get it clean in that you can't smell the oil, but it will taint the cream just the same. If we had to use tin cream pitchers, you wouldn't think of using the same pitcher for cream on the table and to fill your kerosene lamp. Using cream cans to haul oil in is not unlawful, but results in a financial loss to the produger if the same can is used for dairy purposes again .-- Colorado State Dairy Commission.

Two Important Factors

to Get Alfalfa Stand

The two most important factors in getting a good stand of alfalfa are seed bed preparation and the use of pure adapted alfalfa seed, according to Kansas State Agricultural college agronomists. Alfalfa and small grass seeds should be planted in a finely pulverized moist soil, which contains a good supply of available plant food. Preparation should start early in the season, and at this time the seed bed should be put into final condition by frequent working with the straight, a cultipacker, a drag, or a harrow to firm the subsurface well and to smooth and pulverize the surface soil.

Most of the winter killing of alfalfa last winter and spring, was due to using southern grown, or imported seed, say agronomists who urge the use of only native grown seed free from weeds.

Rye Is Now Recommended for Winter Cow Pasture

Farmers who do not have wheat for fall and winter pasture for dairy cows should sow some rye, say dairymen at the Kansas State Agricultural col-One precaution that must be observed in pasturing dairy cows on rye, especially where milk is sold, is to remove the cows from pasture three or four hours before milking. This precaution will keep the milk from being tainted with the characteristic rye flavor, which is objectionable to some people. The college herd is pastured on rye from seven o'clock in the morning until one o'clock in the afternoon.

Produce Excellent Hay

Crop by Sowing Timothy When timothy is sown alone in the fall it produces an excellent hay crop the following summer, but when sown during late winter or early spring it is necessary to wait until the following year to get a hay crop. Timothy may be sown with either wheat or rye. When sown with a nurse crop from 6 to 8 pounds of seed per acre should be used. When sown alone, about 10 pounds is the proper amount.

Clover, either sweet or red, may be sown with the timothy in the spring.

Double Value of Straw

Farmers imagine when they bale straw and sell it for enough to pay actual cost of baling and hauling that they are getting as much out of it as possible. Are they? Dry straw may not be of great value as fertilizer, but when mixed with fresh manure its worth is more than doubled. More liberal use of bedding results in cleaner and healthier animals, and gives a larger amount of fertilizer.

Wintering Calf on

Gains Do Not Justify the Additional Expense.

In wintering calves the use of grain in the ration increases the cost of wintering materially and does not sufficiently increase the total gains at the time or subsequently to justify the additional expense, says the United States Department of Agriculture. This conclusion was reached from the results of a series of experiments carried on by the department in cooperation with the West Virginia experiment station in which grade Shorthorn. Hereford, and Aberdeen calves were used to determine the effect of different winter rations on gains the following summer.,

One lot of calves receiving a ration of mixed hay and a grain mixture of 3 parts corn, 1 part bran, and 1 part linseed meal made a winter gain of 98 pounds each, which was more than twice as much as another lot which was fed corn silage and clover hay. The latter drove, however, made a greater gain the following summer on pasture and lacked only 42 pounds of reaching the same total as the grainfed calves. The cost of the grain ration through the winter did not justify the extra gains, says the department.

In fact, the experiment was carried until the calves were three years old, in which time the advantage in weight due to grain feeding the first winter was practically all lost by the time they were three years old.

Soiling Crops or Corn

Silage as Supplements

Soiling crops or corn silage are recommended as supplements drought damaged pastures used for dairy herds. If the dairyman lacks corn silage and is not in position to feed a soiling crop, he should give his cow a grain ration, says O. G. Schaefer of the dairy division, University farm, St. Paul, Minn. For average or low producing cows on pastures badly burned the grain ration should consist of equal parts of corn and oats or equal parts of barley and oats. For cows of more than average production one pound of oil meal should be added to the ration for every five or six pounds of the corn and oats or barley and oats. Where no pasture is left at all the cows should be fed about as in winter.

Save Farm Machinery by Covering and Painting

Now is the time of year to get all the farm machinery under cover and painted.

If the metal is covered with paint, it will not rust. Rust destroys thousands of dollars' worth of farm machinery each year. Not even a wealthy farmer can afford to neglect his ma-

Grease and rust that has accumulated should first be removed. The rust may be removed by means of sandpaper, or a strong steel brush. Grease may be removed with soft, warm water

A coat of paint over anything is the same as a covering, and protects what it covers from the elements. It is economy to paint.

Keep Late Spring Pigs

on Good Growing Ration

Late spring pig litters should be kept on a good growing ration well supplied with either skim milk or tankage. If there is any indication of cheaper corn this fall these late spring pigs might be carried along for growth on a limited corn and tankage ration while on good pasture. Until good pasture does arrive a liberal supply of tankage or skim milk and grain should be provided.

Little is gained by keeping a pig down to half efficiency by a limited ration. Young pigs become stunted on pasture alone. At least two pounds of grain daily on good pasture for 100 pounds of live weight are required for best results.

Early plowed kafir stubble makes good oat ground.

Clean hens in clean quarters make for poultry profits.

Fifty ears of corn should be gathered for every acre to be planted

Poison bran mash is an indispensable item on the last banquet menu for grasshoppers.

Corn selected for seed should be stored at once in a dry, well-ventilated place where it will cure quickly and remain dry. Roughly, soy straw may be regarded as about two-thirds as valuable as clover hay, but this is not an exact figure by any means. Legumes take from 50 to 100 pounds of nitrogen to the acre from the air annually. An amount sufficient for a 50-bushel corn crop. Seed some alfalfa this fall. Oats is a good grain to feed colts, but when not available a grein ration consisting of six parts corn, three parts bran, and one part linseed oil meal, is a splendid substitute.

Grain Too Costly POUTRY

FALL REMINDERS OF FARM FLOCKS

The past few months have been our dull months with chickens. About all we could do was to raise a flock of good pullets for winter egg production. Any man who has tried raising noultry knows that the last few months have called for extra effort on our part. But the time will soon be here when we are going to reap what we have been sowing writes J. W. Recknor, Jr., in the Farm and Ranch. The pullets will shell out the eggs and the price will soar higher as cold weather comes on. Our dull months, you see, have been our hard-working months. But to reap what is due us we must not lay down on the job now as cool weather approaches. The thing to do is to get everything in the best shape possible to clean up some cash this winter. The merchant puts his store in the best shape possible, cleans up and improves as much as he can, so as to be prepared for the fall business. Here is where his profits pile up. During the dull season he gets by, perhaps, but he counts on the business this fall for extra profits.

Clean up the old store. That is, cull out the nonproducers from the flock. Get rid of the drones. Keep nothing on the yards except moneymakers. Turn all the shoddy goods to the market man, and hit the fall and winter months with a flock of healthy, vigorous bread-winners that bring in the dough. If you have a large flock and you are afraid to do the culling, then get the assistance of some one who has had some experience. It pays to cull. You get the same number of eggs on less feed and house room. The nonlayers eat up your profits and crowd the producers. Get rid of them.

If you are not feeding the birds as you should, get them on a good ration at once, as the pullets must be in condition to lay. If you have bred-to-lay chickens and you have done your part in keeping the pullets growing all summer and you continue to give them the right kind of attention, you need not fear but what you will be rewarded this fall and winter with a heavy egg production. Feeding right has much to do with a laying hen. She can't lay unless her food contains all the elements that go to make up an egg, and in the right proportions at that. An egg ration will have to be fed through the winter. It might pay to look into your feeding methods. Sometimes, by doing this, a mistake can be detected before it is too late.

Handling of Pullets in Autumn Requires Skill

No one thing requires more skill than the correct handling of a flock of pullets so that a maximum yield of eggs may be obtained all winter. First of all, the birds must be fat, as this gives them the necessary strength and endurance. To have them fat, large quantities of hard grain must be fed. Three-fourths of the food they conume should be hard grain. It is not as important during the latter part of their development that they have as much mash as when ready to lay. If milk is fed, very little mash is necessary. They should have plenty of green food at all times.

When the first eggs are found on the range, at least one-third or onehalf of the birds best developed should be placed in their winter quarters. If the birds are allowed to remain very long on the range after starting to lay, the change to winter houses is sure to check them and may cause a fall molt. When the remaining birds show maturity, they should be put in winter quarters also.

Caution in Culling Is Urged by a Poultryman Practically every rule has its excep-"Early molting birds are poor layers," say experienced poultrymen. This is true in the main, but there are exceptions. N. E. Chapman, poultryman with the agricultural extension service. University of Minnesota, points out that many farm flocks went into a premature molt early in June because of lack of feed, hot poultry houses at night, and depredations of mites. Egg production by these flocks fell off rapidly, but as sufficient feed is supplied and poultry houses properly ventilated and the mites exterminated, the flocks are gradually increasing production

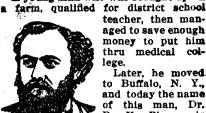

"When culling such flocks, each hen should be carefully studied for evidence that the molt is about to subside," says Mr. Chapman. "The best hens will come back and they ought to have their charce. The poorest ones will, of course, continue to molt and should be discarded."

Balanced Dry Mash

The use of a balanced dry mash containing 2 per cent ground limestone in addition to the hopper of oyster shells will usually prevent the production of soft-shelled eggs. A failure of the egg-making organs to function properly might cause softshelled eggs. Such hens have to be located by the trap nest or by observation in small flocks. Then they can be marketed and replaced with vigorous pullets which will probably be free from such trouble.

JAMES B. DUKE DIES; GAVE AWAY MILLIONS

Former Head of American Tobacco Company Succumbs to Pneumonia.

New York.-James Buchanan Duke, formerly president of the American Tobacco company, died at his home here. He had been ill for several weeks with bronchial pneumonia.

Present at the bedside were the wife, Mrs. Nannie Lee Holt Duke, and their twelve-year-old daughter. Doris.

James B. Duke rose from such poverty that he was often called "one of the last of the log cabin successes of American life." He was born in 1857 on the small farm of his father, Washington Duke, a few miles east of Dur-

Denied the advantages of higher education, Mr. Duke had a clear conception of its value, and in the fall of 1924 made perhaps the largest single gift on record for its furtherance. The chief object of his bounty was Trinity college at Durham, N. C., long known as an excellent "small college" with an honorable record of intellectual service.

It was his desire to see the "Old North State" provided with a university that would rank with the great institutions of New England and the middle states. Accordingly he created a trust fund of $40,000,000.

Estimates of the amount of Mr. Duke's fortune have ranged from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000.

Mr. Duke married in Camden, N. J., in 1904, Mrs. Lillian N. McCredy, divorced wife of William D. McCredy, a New York broker. About a year later he obtained a divorce in New Jersey, naming Maj. Frank T. Huntoon.

In July,, 1907, Mr. Duke married Nannie Lee Holt Inman of Atlanta, Ga. Last March the first Mrs. Duke started suit to set aside her divorce. The action failed.

MISSING MAIL FLYER FOUND DEAD IN PLANE

Believed to Have Crashed Into Mountains During Fog.

Bellefonte, Pa.—Crushed amid the giant trees on the side of Nittany mountain, the wreckage of a government mail plane disclosed the body of Charles H. Ames, the pilot for whom thousands have been searching nine

It was evident that Ames, for six years a pilot, was flying low on the night of October 1 while en route from New York to the West with a cargo of mail. Air-mail officials expressed the belief that the birdman, confused by a dense fog, had piloted his ship into the mountain side, meeting instant death when the plane crashed into the forest.

When found the dead pilot was seated in the cockpit, his right arm the control stick and his parachute was strapped to his back, with two flares, the aviators' signal of distress. lying by his side. The gas tank contained sufficient fuel to carry him some distance, and all switches of the motor were on. This led the mail officials to believe that death was instantaneous.

Coroner W. R. Heaton, after examining the body at an undertaking establishment here, said that Ames' death was "due to a fracture of the frontal bone." There was a bad cut on the airman's forehead and bruises on the face. Other parts of the body were unmarked.

Intact in the rear section of the wrecked ship were the 13 pouches of mail with which Ames started on the fatal trip. They were sent on to Chi-

CHICAGO GRAIN PIT BOWS TO U. S. DECREE

Limit Is Placed on Markets' Fluctuation—Reform Rule: Adopted.

Chicago.-Warned twice by Secretary of Agriculture Jardine, the last time less than two weeks ago, that its long-promised housecleaning would have to begin immediately, the Chicago Board of Trade adopted stringent rules to prevent market manipulation and other practices complained of.

One of the new regulations places in the hands of the directors of the board almost complete control of the market during wild price swings. On ten-hours' notice, without appeal to the members as a whole, the directors may place an arbitrary limit on price fluctuations. Thereafter they may prohibit trading during any day at prices above or below a certain percentage of the closing price the night before.

To declare such an emergency, twelve directors must be present and two-thirds must vote in the affirmative. Heavy penalties are provided for violators of this rule.

A second rule provides for creation of a business conduct committee of five members, who will have full power to regulate the ethics of trading and to protect interests of the public. Under the third new rule, the 600 out-of-town members of the board are allowed to vote by mail. The first and second rules were passed by a vote of nearly 5 to 1; the third by 2 to 1. It is believed that other grain exchanges will adopt similar revisions. Minneapolis approved almost the identical set of rules. The belief is general that the changes will end the war between grain ezchanges and farmers' organizations, which began with postwar deflation in the prices of agricultural products. The government will keep close watch on the board.

The LACK GA

A Sequel to Bulldog Drummond.

GEORGE H. DORAN CO.

BY CYRIL MCNEILE SAPPER

"IT'S A BOMBI"

STNOPSIS.—To a gathering of. anarchists in Barking, London suburb, Zaboleff, foreign agitator, tells of the operations of a body of men who have become a menace to their activities. He says they are masked and wear long black cloaks and are acting without the law. He is interrupted by the men he is describing (the Black Gang), who break up the meeting, sentencing some of the participants to condign punishment and carrying away others. A memorandum found on Zaboleff gives an address in Hoxton, which the leader of the attacking party considers of im-portance. Sir Bryan Johnstone, director of criminal investigation, hears from Inspector Mc-Iver, sent to arrest Zaboleff the night before, of his discomfiture. He had been seized and chloroformed and his raid frustrated. Hugh Drummond, man of leisure, tells Johnstone of seeing the kidnapers and their victims. He be-comes an unpaid agent of the police, under McIver. William Atkinson, ostensibly pawnbroker and money lender, really Count Zadowa, director of anarchy in England, does business in an-other London suburb. A mys-terious stranger invades the premises. Drummond attempts premises. Drummond attempts to burglarize the premises to get evidence. Zadowa lays a trap for Drummond and his burglars.

--8---Once again the three men stood motionless, listening intently, but the sound was not repeated. Absolute silence reigned, broken only by the noise of their own breathing. And at last, after what seemed an interminable rause. Drummond switched on his torch again. The passage was empty; the door of the inner office was just in front of them. Almost he was persuaded that he must have made a mistake-that it had been his imagination. He peered through the keyhole: the room was in darkness. He turned the handle cautiously; the door gave to him; and still with his torch held well in front of him, he stepped into the room, turning the light into every corner. Not a trace of anyone; the inner office was absolutely empty. He flashed the light all round the walls, as far as he could see there was no other door-not even a window. Consequently the only way out was by the door through which they had just entered, which was obviously impossible for anyone to have done without his knowledge. "It is all right!" he muttered, turn ing round to the other two. "Must have been my mistake. Now then, Ginger, let's tackle the big desk first.' As he spoke he moved into the center of the room, his torch lighting up the big roll-top desk. "Right-ho, guv'nor. Keep the beam on the keyhole-" The crook bent over his task, only to straighten up suddenly as all the lights went on.

"Yer d-d fool!" he snarled. "Switch em off! It ain't safe."

"I didn't put 'em on!" snapped Drummond.

"Nor I," said Jerningham. For a moment or two no one spoke; then Ginger Martin made a wild dive for the door. But the door which had opened so easily a few moments before now refused to budge, though he tugged at it, cursing horribly. And after a while he gave it up, and turned on Drummond like a wild beast.

"You've trapped me, yer --- swine. I'll get even with you over this if I swing for it!"

But Drummond, to whom the presence of actual danger was as meat and drink, took not the slightest notice. His brain, ice-cold and clear, was moving rapidly. It had not been a mistake, he had heard voices—voices which came from that very room in which they now were. Men had been there-men who had got out by some other way. And Ginger Martin was trapped-all of them. More out of thoughtlessness than anything else, he brushed the swearing crook aside with | that he was looking. And after a mothe back of his hand-much as one brushes away a troublesome fly. And Martin, feeling as if he'd been kicked the person who had thrown the bomb, in the mouth by a horse, ceased to swear. It was uncanny—devilish. The room empty, save for them, suddenly flooded with light. But by whom? Drummond felt they were being watched. But by whom? And then suddenly he heard Ted Jerningham's voice, low and tense. "There's a man watching us, Hugh. I can see his eyes. In that big safe door."

Like a flash, Drummond swung round, and looked at the safe. Ted was right; he could see the eyes himself, and they were fixed on him with an expression of malignant fury, brough a kind of opening that looked Look," like the slit in a letter box. For a moment or two they remained there, staring at him, then they disappeared also, and seemed to become part of the door. And it was just as he was moving toward this mysterious safe to examine it closer that with a sudden clang, another opening appeared—one much larger than the first. He stopped involuntarily as something was thrown through into the room-something which hissed and spluttered.

For a moment he gazed at it uncomprehendingly as it lay on the floor; "On your faces-for your lives!"

then he gave a sudden, tense order. His voice cut through the room like a knife. "Behind the desk, you fools! It's a bomb!'

CHAPTER V

In Which the Bag of Nuts Is Found by Accident

It was the desk that saved Drummond, and with him Ted Jerningham. Flat on their faces, their arms covering their heads, they lay on the floor waiting, as in days gone by they had waited for the bursting of a too-near crump. They heard Ginger Martin, as he blundered round the room, and then-suddenly it came.

There was a deafening roar, and a sheet of flame which seemed to fill the room. Great lumps of the ceiling rained down and the big roll-top desk cracked in pieces and splintered into matchwood, fell over on top of them. But it had done its work; it had borne the full force of the explosion in their direction. As a desk its day was past; it had become a series of holes roughly held together by fragments of wood.

So much Drummond could see by the aid of his torch. With the explosion all the lights had gone out, and for a while he lay pressed against Ted Jerningham trying to recover his wits. His head was singing like a bursting kettle: his back felt as if it was broken where a vast lump of ceiling had hit him. But after moving his legs cautiously and then his arms. he decided that he was still alive. And having arrived at that momentous conclusion the necessity for prompt action became evident. A bomb bursting in London is not exactly a private affair.

There Was a Deafening Roar, and a Sheet of Flame Seemed to Fill the Room.

"Are you all right, Ted?" he muttered hoarsely, his mouth full of plaster and dust.

"I think so, old man," answered Jeringham, and Drummond heaved a sigh of relief. "I got a whack on the back of the head from something."

Drummond scrambled to his feet, and switched on his torch. The wreckage was complete, but it was for the third member of the party ment or two he found him, and cursed with a vigorous fury that boded ill for if he ever met him.

For Ginger Martin, being either too frightened or too ignorant, had not done as he was told. There had been no desk between him and the bomb when it burst, and what was left of him adorned a corner. There was nothing to be done: the unfortunate crook would never again burgle a safe. And the only comfort to Drummond was that death must have been absolutely instantaneous.

"Poor devil," he muttered. "Some one is going to pay for this." And then he felt Jerningham clutching his arm. "It's blown a hole in the wall, man.

It was true: he could see the light of a street lamp shining through a great jagged hole. "Some bomb," he muttered. "Let's

He gave a final flash of his torch round the floor, as they moved toward the shattered wall, and then suddenly stopped.

"What's that?" Right in the center of the beam, lying in the middle of the floor, was a small chamois leather bag. It seemed unhurt, and, without thinking, Hugh picked it up and put it in his pocket. Then switching off the torch, they both clambered through the hole, dropped on to a lean-to roof, and reached the ground.

They were at the back of the house in some deserted mews, and rapidity of movement was clearly indicated. Already a crowd was hurrying to the scene of the explosion, and slipping quietly out of the dark alley, they joined in themselves.

"Go home, Ted," said Drummond. "I must get the others."

"Right, old man." He made no demur, but just vanished quietly, while his leader slouched on toward the front door of 5 Green street. The police were already beating on it, while a large knot of interested spectators giving gratuitous advice stood around them. And in the crowd Drummond could see six of his gang, six anxious men who had determined-police or no police—to get upstairs and see what had happened. In one and all their minds was a sickening fear, that the man they followed had at last bitten off more than he could chewthat they'd find him blown to pieces in the mysterious room upstairs.

And then, quite clear and distinct above the excited comments of the crowd, came the hooting of an owl. A strange sound to hear in a London street, but no one paid any attention. Other more engrossing matters were on hand, more engrossing that is to all except the six men who instantaneously swung half round as they heard it. For just a second they had a glimpse of a huge figure standing in the light of a lamp post on the other side of the street-then it disappeared. And with astonishing celerity they followed its example. Whoever had been hurt it was not Drummond; and that, at the moment, was all they were concerned with.

By devious routes they left the scene of the explosion-each with the same goal in his mind. And within an hour six young men, shorn of all disguise and clad in immaculate evening clothes, were admitted to Drummond's house in Brook street by a somewhat sleepy Denny.

They found/Hugh arrayed in a gorgeous dressing gown with a large tankard of beer beside him, and his wife sitting on the arm of his chair. "What happened, old lad?" asked

Peter Darrell. "I got handed the frozen mitten. I asked for bread, and they put across a half-brick. To be absolutely accurate we got into the room all right, and having got in we found we couldn't get out. Then some one switched on the light and bunged a bomb at us through a hole in the door. Quite O. K., old girl"—he put a reassuring arm round Phyllis' waist—"I think we'd be still there if they hadn't."

"Is Ted all right?" asked Toby Sinclair.

"Yes. Ted's all right. Got a young load of bricks in his back when the ceiling came down-but he's all right. butterfat. It's the other poor devil—Ginger Marthe others waited in silence for him to

"There was a big desk in the room, and the bomb fell on one side of it. Ted and I gave our well-known impersonation of an earthworm on the other, which saved us. Unfortunately Ginger Martin elected to run round in small circles and curse. And he will curse no more.'

"Dead?" Peter Darrell's voice was low. "Very," answered Drummond quietly. "The poor blighter was blown to pieces. If he'd done what I told him he wouldn't have been, but that's beside the point. He was working for me, and he was killed while he was doing so. And I don't like that happening."

"What do you propose to do?" demanded Jerry Seymour.

Well, that was a narrow escape. Evidently Zadowa is a dangerous man. What's Drummond's next move?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Had Learned Something

A woman called at a studio for a sitting. The photographer made two negatives and promised proofs for the following day.

The next day her husband called for the proofs, but the photographer showed him only one. The husband said: "My understanding was that there were to be two proofs."

"I did make two sittings of your wife," replied the photographer, "but in one she held her lips apart and showed the end of her tongue."

"My goodness," gasped the husband, "let me see that one. I didn't know there was an end to it."

RAPID DECLINE IN MILK PRODUCTION

The rapid decline in milk production as the summer advances is the result of a combination of factors, says C. B. Bender, assistant dairy husbandman at the New Jersey College of Agriculture, New Brunswick. Chief among these is the poor condition of pasture.

In many regions a drought in midsummer causes tough and woody pasture. The result is that the cow, especially if producing a liberal amount of milk, doesn't get sufficient food and loses flesh by trying to keep up production. Finally the production declines, slowly at first and then more rapidly as conditions become extreme. Records from creameries show that for 100 pounds of milk delivered June 1 there are only 46 pounds delivered August 1.

Flies may be a slight factor, but their importance is overestimated. The flies and the hot weather are factors in so far as they both discourage the animals from grazing.

If kept on pasture the cows should be turned out to graze during the early morning and late evening. The growing of soiling crops may be a good practice. Grain is an effective means of holding up production, but it is an expensive practice to the extent that the grain replaces grass. Silage is not a complete ration, but it may be used alone to supplement pastures. If conditions are such that most of the feed has to be supplied outside of pastures, then the feeding should be practically the same as in

If the production of the herd drops to a marked degree during the summer it cannot be brought back to the point where it should be. Therefore, to insure a paying fall production, it is highly important to keep up the milk flow during the summer, even though there may be no immediate profit.

Records of Cow-Testing

Association Are Exact

Yearly milk and butterfat production as determined in cow-testing associations by weighing and testing one day's production each month is accurate within a very small per cent, says the United States Department of Agriculture. To determine the accuracy of the cow-testing association method of calculating yearly production, the department made a study of the actual yearly production records of 70 cows of the Minnesota experiment station. These Minnesota records gave the production of milk and butterfat for each milking throughout the year.

By systematically picking out the weights and tests for one day each month as they would have been obtained by cow-testing association methods and thus calculating the yearly production it was found that the association method was accurate within 2 per cent on milk production and within 3 per cent on production of

A tabulation was also made of 100 tin." His face was grim and stern, and | yearly individual cow records from the department farm at Beltsville, Md. These records gave only the milk production night and morning for each day in the year. A yearly total, calculated from one day's record each month, when compared with the actual milk production showed an accuracy within 1.99 per cent. These comparisons indicate that the method used in cow-testing association work gives a very accurate record of production.

Alfalfa and Clover Are

Good for Dairy Heifers

That alfalfa or clover hay fed with corn to dairy heifers produces good growth and favors early maturity, was shown by recent feeding tests at the Ohio experiment station. In the tests, continued through two winters, alfalfa hay and corn were fed to one lot of Holstein and Jersey heifers and clover hay and corn to a similar lot.

Without other feed both lots made more than average normal growth. Alfalfa hay did not prove greatly superior to clover hay for growth when fed liberally with corn, but it did prove superior to clover hay for fattening, or gain in weight. The tests showed that either alfalfa or clover fed with corn furnishes sufficient protein and other essential materials to produce excellent growth.

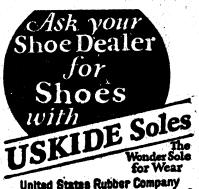

The liberal use of legume hays favors early maturity of heifers. This permits early breeding with a consequent saving in time and cost. The legumes carry more calcium, or lime, than the grasses, and good alfalfa, clover, or other legume hay, is therefore better than timothy or other grass hay for growth.

Dairy Hints

Keep the drinking water supply for the dairy herd clean and wholesome.

Ship your cream at least three times week during this hot weather. Keep it cool.
