Old English Law

Based on Bible

"Benefit of clergy" was a privilege once enjoyed by the clergy of England, whereby they were exempted from civil punishment. The origin of this exemption is unknown, but the custom was probably based on the text: "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm" (I Chron. 16:22; Ps. 105:15). Edward I in 1274 extended this privilege to all laymen that could read. Such a criminal could not be put to death, but was to be branded on the left hand. The first verse of Psalm 50 was chosen as the reading test, and hence was known as the "neck verse." In 1691, this privilege was extended to women. The privilege eventually became a dead letter; it was variously restricted and finally in 1827 in the reign of George IV, it was abolished altogether.-Kansas City Star.

LD MAN NEGLEY had prom- | child was has learned to pick out a ised Colonel Prouse to come to the colonel's Vine street house, after work hours, to begin the education of his six-month collie pup.

The colonel had made a false start in this education by losing his temper at the puppy. Thus for the first few minutes after his own arrival in the Prouse yard, Old Man Negley contented himself with romping with the youngster and feeding him bits of cracker from a capacious side pocket.

The little collie was in a gay and friendly mood by the time the old man (still in the same tone as when they had been playing), said to him:

He accompanied the words by a softly steady pressure of his gnarled hand on the pup's loins. Bit by bit, under that friendly pressure, the puppy sank to a sitting posture; Old Man Negley continuing to repeat over and

"Lie down. Lie down. Lie down." As the collie seated himself, the pressing hand was shifted to his shoulders; the old man never ceasing to repeat: "Lie down."

As at last, under this light pressure, the puppy's forefeet slid forward and he lay at full length. Old Man Negley praised him extravagantly and noisily; petting him and feeding him more tits of sweet cracker.

The collie realized he himself had done some highly praiseworthy thing; even if he did not yet know what that thing was. And, being full of vanity, he was tremendously pleased with

A second and a third and fourth time the old man repeated the per formance of making the dog lie down, by pressing afternately his loins and shoulders and by saying the same words over and over again; ever rewarding the completion of this by much praise and by fragments of food.

Inside of ten minutes it began to dawn on the clever baby's mind that the act of lying down had something to do with all this praise and petting. Wherefore, in an experimental fashion, he proceeded to lie down at Old Man Negley's command. The old man was dramatically loud in his delight at so wonderful a performance.

On his next order to lie down, the puppy eagerly dropped to the ground. And the praise and the feeding were repeated.

"That's all for today," announced Old Man Negley, "We won't make him do it again; but we'll stop while he's still proud of himself and while it's a stunt and not yet a chore. I'll be around tomorrow."

On the next day the young collie lay down the second time he was hidden to, and after a single hand pressure. He did the same thing five times, in intervals of a romp, during the next quarter hour. "He knows it, now, colonel," reported Old Man Negley. "Tell him to do it about three times a day for the next week. By that time it'll be rooted in his mind for life. The following afternoon's lesson was given up to teaching the puppy to punish him for his own fault; not as shake hands. This was far easier of achievement; since the offering of a friendly paw is one of a puppy's natural gestures. Sitting in front of the collie, Old Man Negley would pick up one forepaw, repeating "Shake hands. Shake hands. Shake hands," throughout the operation; and then giving the former meed of praise and food.

In another few minutes, he recommenced the lesson. And, in short time, the collie was shaking hands to order with the effusiveness of a politician.

By the end of the fourth lesson the dog had not only mastered these first two tricks, but was going through them with the conceited delight of a ings against its noxious properties.

Value of Family Living on Farm

Some Important Factors in Stability and Safety of Rural Life.

(Prepared by the United States Department

An important factor in the stability and safety of the farming business and of rural life exists in the housing facilities, and the fuel and food received from the home farm by the farmer and his family in connection with the operation of the farm, says the United States Department of Agriculture. This observation is made in analyzing farm business surveys conducted during the years 1918 to 1922, inclusive, covering 7,738 farms situated in 30 localities in 21 states. These farms represent varying types of agriculture and are operated under different topographic, soil, climatic, and marketing conditions. They comprise dairy farms in New England and Wisconsin, cotton plantations of the southern states, citrus groves and early truck farms of Florida, orchards of the Shenandoah valley in Virginia and near Niagara Falls in New York, grain and live stock farms of the corn belt, grain farms and grazing in the Great Plains region, extensive wheat farms in the Palouse country of Idaho and Washington and in northern Oregon, and farms under irrigation in the West and Northwest.

Six Vital Items.

Six items constituted 92 per cent of the value of the family living from the farm, namely: house rent, fuel dairy products, poultry and eggs, pork and lard, and fruit and vegetables, Food made up 61 per cent of the family living from the farm, and house rent and fuel 36 per cent and 3 per cent, respectively. The cow, the hog, and the hen ranked in the order named in their contributions to the family larder, while pork stood first among the meats consumed.

Some commodities entering into the family living from the farm, such as small potatoes, and overripe or undersized fruits, frequently have little or no market value, and garden vegetables in many localities cannot be marketed. Their use by the farmer's family does not materially reduce the cash income. On the other hand, the farm home requires liberal quantities of to one of the simplest and yet most such products as butter, eggs, and These commodities usually hogs. have a ready sale, and their utiliza-Taking between his fingers a bit of tion by the farmer's family, to an apfood, he held it in front of the collie's preciable degree flattens the farm The dog stepped forward to purse. Value of Family Living.

The value of the family living from the farm ranged from nothing to over $1,000. This variation was found among families in the same locality with a somewhat less variation among different localities. Even in localities where the farmer concentrated upon nonfood crops, such as cotton, the farm contributed directly to the food requirements of his family, through crop and animal side lines. Where diversified farming was practiced, the pantry of the farm home was supplied with an abundance of home-grown food.

The value of the family living from the farm on about 70 per cent of the farms varied from $200 to $800. In a few localities the farm income averaged less than $1,000 per farm, even in the palmy years of 1918 and 1919. In others the average for that period exceeded $4,000. The average size of the farms ranged from less than 100 acres in some sections to more than 1.000 acres in others.

The value of the family living from the farm is, of course, more constant than the farm income, as the farmer's family have first call upon food supplies whether abundant or short. In the interest of a stable agriculture "Only, just keep on remembering it is imperative that the farm provide, not only adequate housing facilities and some fuel, but also an abundance of food for the farmer's family. To this end, a wise diversification of production is indispensable.

Drying Off Cow Often Is

Difficult for Dairyman Often it is difficult to dry off a cow. Many practices are followed by different farmers. The practice of milking cows but once a day is most common. It is often the sole method used to end the period of lactation.

There are, however, other ways to assist in drying up the cow. Some milk at irregular intervals. Others milk often, but do not milk dry. Eliminating the grain from the ration is a practice that is quite commonly followed. Feeds rich in protein, like grain and alfalfa hay, and also succulent feeds, can be taken advantageously from the animals while drying them off. There appears to be a general notion among the best dairymen to let up gradually on both the feeding and the milking to encourage the cow

Velvet Beans Good Ration for Steers

May Be Substituted for Cottonseed Meal.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Velvet beans and corn silage in equal quantities form a satisfactory ration for fattening steers. In such a ration velvet beans may be economically substituted for cottonseed meal, provided they do not cost more than half as much per pound (in the pod) as that product. These facts were established in feeding experiments conducted in Mississippi by the United States Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the state agricultural experiment station, and in similar investigations carried on by the department at its experimental farm at Beltsville, Md. In one of the experiments native steers showing no evidence of improved blood were used. In all the others, high-grade feeder steers were employed. The experiments were undertaken primarily to determine the value of velvet beans when fed with corn silage or sorgo silage as compared with cottonseed meal when similarly fed, and also whether velvet beans should be fed whole or ground, dry or soaked.

Two pounds of velvet beans (in the pod) were found to be about equal in feeding value to one pound of cottonseed meal. When the whole velvet beans were substituted for cottonseed meal in the ration for the steers, only about two-thirds as much silage was eaten, the large amount of roughage formed by the bean hulls being responsible for the reduced consumption of silage.

Whole velvet beans when soaked are nore palatable than the dry beans, but the latter are more economical when the labor required for soaking them is considered.

Grinding of velvet beans is not advisable, since it renders them less palatable and impairs their keeping quality. While from 5 to 10 per cent less ground velvet beans than of dry whole velvet beans are required to produce 100 pounds of gain, this saving does not compensate for the cost of grinding. Furthermore, ground velvet beans are so unpalatable that steers will not eat enough of them to make good gains.

In the course of the experiments it was found that cottonseed meal is more palatable than velvet beans in any form, and that it produces more rapid, though not more economical gains than velvet beans. The palatability of velvet beans may be improved by the addition of a small quantity of cottonseed meal to the beans. The most economical form in which to feed velvet beans is in the pod without soaking. Velvet beans of the thinpodded, speckled variety are much higher in feeding value and more palatable than several varieties which have a very thick pod, and consequently, a low shelling percentage. Velvet beans of this variety are, moreover, a valuable protein concentrate.

Packing Apples Is Most Important Harvest Task

"Packing apples is a most important part of the harvest," says Prof. Joseph | ning a separator or for heating water Oskamp of the New York College of Agriculture at Ithaca. "More attention should be given to racking or shaking the barrel to settle the fruit

"To get a tight pack, rack the barrel after adding each half-bushel. Over-filling the barrel will not take the place of racking, as the apples will settle later on and the pack will become slack.

"A common fault in packing apples is to overfill. Contrary to what might be expected, it does not insure a tight pack, and is apt to bruise the fruit all through the barrel. A properly racked barrel needs but little pressing, and the fruit need be but slightly above the top of the barrel before the press is applied.

"If the fruit is of good quality, and the crop is large, a grading machine may be used economically. The sorting table is an important part of the grading equipment and makes grading a quick and sure job.

"The grower should be governed by his own conditions, however, and if there is a large percentage of culls, he may be wise to sell the crop 'orchard run' without bothering to grade

Seed selection is crop protection.

The 3-L trail to prosperity stands for lime, legumes, and live stock.

Once planted, cover crops take care of themselves-as well as of the soil.

Many a good apple is spoiled by the unnecessary rough handling that attends the picking.

Since good air is just as essential to a cow as food and water, it should be provided in the barn with just as much care and certainty.

The average hen deserves no blue ribbon awards from the viewpoint of egg production. She lays fewer than 90 eggs each year, less than one egg every four days. Not 25 per cent efficient. So far as anyone knows, no hen has ever laid an egg every day for the entire year, yet there are authentic protect the milk from dirt, loose hair. records of as many as 335 eggs being etc. produced by a single hen in 365 days.

IMMATURE CORN IS GOOD FOR SILOING

Weather conditions such as hail, drought, or frost sometimes prevent corn from reaching maturity. Under such circumstances the crop should be siloed, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. Such corn should, if possible, be silved with some that is mature. Silage from immature corn is sourer and more laxative than that from the mature crop. However, if proper care is exercised in feeding such silage, no ill effects should result.

If frosted corn is cut promptly, the stalks may contain enough water so that it may be silved without the addition of water. If the corn has become too dry to pack well, considerable water will have to be added when siloing. The frosting of corn causes only a small loss in feeding value, the greatest loss being occasioned by the falling off of leaves in handling and the possible spoiling of part of the silage owing to its failure to pack and keep properly. Sometimes there is a delay in filling the silo, and it is necessary to cut and shock the corn. Then again on other farms the silo capacity will not take care of the entire crop at one filling. This surplus corn has to be shocked and is available for refilling the silo later on. Such dry corn fodder may be siloed successfully, but it is necessary to wet it thoroughly so that it will pack well in the silo. Water may be added by allowing a stream from a hose to flow into the blower while filling. The surface of the cut material should also be sprinkled as it is distributed in the silo. Corn fodder silage is less palatable and of somewhat lower value than corn siloed under the usual conditions. Owing to the large quantity of water required, siloing corn fodder is advisable only on farms having a water system.

Water Supply for Dairy

Cows of Big Importance The milch cow, of all animals, requires an abundance of pure water. Water constitutes more than threefourths of the raw material used by the cow in the manufacture of milk. Stale or impure water is so distasteful to her that she will not drink a sufficient quantity for maximum milk production. Furthermore impure water may impair the health of the cow. The water supply, therefore, demands the dairyman's most careful attention. During the winter, when cows are stabled the greater part of the time, it is important that they be watered at least two or three times a day unless water is kept before them constantly. It is advisable to supply water to cows at a uniform temperature, preferably 15 to 20 degrees above the freezing point. When water stands in a tank on which ice often forms, it usually pays well to warm it slightly This can be done by a tank heater, by live steam, or by hot water from boiler. If a broiler is used for runto wash and sterilize utensils, steam to Corn for Dairy Cows Barley is a good feed for dairy cows and nearly equal to corn. Some feeders hold it is quite equal to corn if it does not constitute more than 60 per cent of the meal portion of the ration. Corn is a very good feed. It is low in lime, a little heavy, and for this reason should be lightened with some feed like bran and fed with some legume hay like clover or alfalfa for the purpose of supplying an adequate quantity of mineral substance. Bran is a good feed to use with either barley or corn, or both, because it is bulky, has a slight laxative effect, and lightens the mixture. It lacks lime but it is rich in phosphorus.

Dairy Hints

 Cream and milk cool 23 times as fast in water as in air of the same temperature.

Charcoal is recommended as an absorber of foul odors in the milk room. It should be freshly powdered.

For heavy milk production, or for fattening young growing animals, the feeding of grain on pasture is doubtless the most economical method.

A hooded or small-top milk pail protects the milk from dust and dirt falling from the body of the cow, and makes possible the production of a much cleaner milk.

No one wants to produce milk from a sick cow, nor subject the rest of his herd to infection from such a

Alfalfa hay is at the top of the list of roughages for the dairy cow, because of its high protein content and its palatability.

More Fords

The Ford Motor Company reached the highest production peak in the records of the company Friday of egg albumen to the leather binding when 8.165 cars and trucks went; off the assembly lines of domestic branches. Friday's record, however, is expected to be short lived, for production will reach 8,500 daily before the end of the month, making possible a total output of approximately 200,000 for October, the greatest in Ford history.

This information was contained in a statement issued at the company's general offices here Saturday afternoon, which details the remarkable industrial accomplishment effected in producing the improved Ford cars and which at the same time definitely dispels all fictitious rumors regarding Ford production circulated since the new cars were announced.

"Less than sixty days after discontinuing its former style passenger cars the Ford Motor Company has brought the improved types into normal production in all its assembly plants throughout the United States," it was stated.

"The former type passenger cars went out of production in August during which month 4,616 passenger cars were produced.

"Because of the many changes and improvements made in Ford bodies it was necessary to re-arrange departments in all assembly plants, install considerable equipment, and lengthen paint ovens to permit longer baking and an increase in the number of coats of paint given the cars. This was accomplished and production started in the plants early in September

"Output of the improved cars increased rapidly and for the week ending September 19 the production total showed 22,376 cars and trucks.

"Since that time output has been growing steadily. During the last few weeks the company has been shipping through its branches more than 7,000 cars and trucks a day, the shipments increasing to the record reached Friday, October 16 when 8,165 cars and trucks were produced. This output will be increased to 8, 00 a day before the end of the month. Production for October will run close to 200,000, a new high record."

INCOME TAX SCHEDULE

Incomes of $6,000 and Ovver May Be Affected.

Washington. - Normal tax rates would include four brackets instead of three if congress adopts a suggestion submitted to the house ways and means committee by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon.

The rates proposed are 1 per cent on the first $3,000 of taxable income, 2 per cent on the next $1,000, 3 per cent on the next $4,000 and 5 per cent on the amount above $8,000.

Secretary Mellon, in a letter to the committee said that while he did not wish to be understood as attempting to dictate exact rates, he believed the four-bracket schedule would be more satisfactory than the three-bracket arrangement, which he first submitted.

The loss in revenue, he explained, would be about the same under the new proposal as under the other arrangement—namely: a loss of $140,-000,000 the first year and $100,000,000 the second year.

Secretary Mellon originally informed the committee that the $140,000,000 loss estimate was based on normal rates of 1 per cent for the first $3,000, 3 per cent on the next $4,000 and 5 per cent above that. Rates in the present law are 2 per cent on the first $4,000. 4 per cent on the next $4,000 and 6 per cent thereafter.

Nowhere in the voluminous ment is mention made of Mrs. Lillian N. McCready Duke, the testator's first wife, whom he married in 1904 and divorced the following year. At the time of her divorce Mrs. Lillian Duke was said to have received $100,000, only to lose it through a broker.

GREEK-BULGAR ROW GOES BEFORE LEAGUE

Macedonians May Join Fight -Sofia Reports New Attacks.

Geneva.-If Greece withdraws her troops from Bulgaria and shows reasonableness, the council of the League of Nations will be inclined to let the Graeco-Bulgar affair drop. The matter was taken up in the extraordinary session in Paris. But if Athens is intransigent, the council will institute a special investigation to fix responsibility and if the invasion is found to have been unjustified will take drastic diciplinary measures. The consensus among league officials who have read all the reports is that Greece has deliberately broken the covenant pledges.

The danger of Europe having to face another movement against peace in the Balkans was seen in Belgrade when it was reported that the Macedonian revolution committee had decided to take arms against the Greeks and to organize an armed invasion of Greek territory. Forty chiefs of Macedonian bands have left Sofia for the front where 20,000 irregulars are concentrated.

The governors' chief argument was that the state was entitled to the revenue from its own estates. Other arguments advanced by them can be summarized in the address of Frederic A. Delano, speaking for the National Committee on Inheritance Taxation. Mr. Delano advocated the following ten points:

1. Making inheritance taxes substantially uniform throughout the United States. 2. Making inheritance tax rates stable. 3. Making inheritance tax rates moderate. 4. Enacting legislation at the coming session of congress repealing the federal estate tax. This repeal to take effect in six years.

THOSE DIAMONDS

SYNOPSIS .- To a gathering of anarchists in Barking, London suburb, Zaboleff, foreign agitator, tells of the operations of a body of men who have become a menace to their activities. He says they are masked and wear long black cloaks and are acting without the law. He is interrupted by the men he is describing (the Black Gang), who break the meeting, sentencing some the participants to condign punishment and carrying away others. A memorandum found on Zaboleff gives an address in Hoxton, which the leader of the attacking party considers of importance. Sir Bryan Johnstone, director of criminal investiga-tion, hears from Inspector Mc-Iver, sent to arrest Zaboleff the night before, of his discomfiture He had been seized and chloroformed and his raid frustrated. Hugh Drummond, man of leisure, tells Johnstone of seeing the kidnaners and their victims. He has napers and their victims. He be-comes an unpaid agent of the police, under McIver. William Atkinson, ostensibly pawnbroker and money lender, really Count Zadowa, director of anarchy in England, does business in another London suburb. A mysengland, does business in another London suburb. A mysterious stranger invades the premises. Drummond attempts to burglarize the premises to get evidence. While so engaged, with evidence. While so engaged, with two companions, a bomb is hurled at them. The explosion kills "Ginger Martin," expert burglar. Drummond and his friend escape, taking with them a bag they find on the floor. At a fashionable hotel Rev. Theodosius Longmoor and his daughter Janet are guests. "Longmoor" really is "Longmoor" really is Carl Peterson, international crook, with whom Drummond has an old feud. Zadowa tells them of the bomb he had hurled and the death of the three in-

CHAPTER VI—Continued --10---

"Bombs!" he snarled. Tell me what you did, you dreg!" "Why," stammered the frightened hunchback, "I threw one into the room. I no longer wanted it as an office, and . . . Ah, heaven, don't murder me! . . . What have I done?"

His words died away in a dreadful gurgle, as the clergyman, his face diabolical with fury, sprang on him and gripped him by the throat. He shook the hunchback as a terrier shakes a rat, cursing horribly under his breath -and for a moment or two it seemed as if the other's fear was justified. There was murder in the big man's face, until the touch of the girl's hand on his arm steadled him and brought him to his senses. With a last spasm of fury he hurled the wretched Zadowa into a corner, and left him lying there; then his iron self-control came back to him.

"Get up," he ordered tensely, "and answer some questions." Trembling all over, the hunchback staggered to his feet and came into the center of the room.

"Monsieur," he whined, "I do not understand. What have I done?" "You don't need to understand!" snarled the clergyman. "Tell me exactly what happened when the bomb

"It killed the three men, monsieur," stammered the other.

"Curse the three men!" He lifted his clenched fist, and Zadowa shrank back. "What happened to the room?" "It was wrecked utterly. A great hole was blown in the wall."

'And what happened to the desk?" "I don't know exactly, monsieur," stammered the other. "I didn't go back to see. But it must have been blown to matchwood. Only as there was nothing inside of importance it makes no odds."

"Did you look in the secret drawer at the back of the center opening. You didn't know there was one, did you? Only I knew of its existence, and short of taking the desk to pieces, no one would be able to find it. And you took the desk to pieces, Zadowa, didn't you? You blew it to pieces, Zadowa, didn't you? Just to kill the leader of this trumpery gang, Zadowa, you cursed fool!"

Step by step the hunchback was retreating before the other, terror convulsing his face, until the wall brought him to an abrupt stop.

"You blew the desk to pieces, Zadowa," continued the Reverend Theodosius standing in front of him, "a desk that contained the six most perfect diamonds in the world, Zadowa. With your wretched bomb, you worm, you destroyed a fortune. What have you got to say?"

"I didn't know, monsieur," cringed the other. "How could I know? When were they put there?"

"I put them there this afternoon for safety. Not in my wildest imagination did I dream that you would start throwing bombs about the place."

"Perhaps they are not destroyed," stammered the hunchback hopefully. "In which case they are now in the hands of the police. You have one chance, Zadowa, and only one. It is that those diamonds are in the hands of the police. If they are and you can get them-I will say no more." "But if they have been destroyed, monsieur?" muttered the other.

"Then, Zadowa, I am afraid you will share their fate."

Almost indifferently the clergyman turned back into the room, taking no notice whatever of the wretched man who followed him on his knees begging for mercy. And then after a while the hunchback pulled himself together and stood up.

"It was a mistake, monsieur," he said quietly, "which I deeply regret. It was, however, you must admit, hardly my fault. I will do my best.' "Let us hope, then, for your sake, Zadowa, that your best will be successful. Now go." - He pointed to the door, and without another word the hunchback went.

The girl rose and came over to where the man was standing. "What diamonds are these you talk about?"

The man gave a short, hard laugh. "I didn't tell you," he answered. "There was no object in your knowing for a time. I know your weakness where jewels are concerned too well. my dear; I got them the night before last in Amsterdam. Do you remember that Russian-Stanovitch? That wasn't his real name. He was the eldest son of the Grand Duke Georgius, and he had just arrived from Russia."

"The man who took that overdose of his sleeping-draught?" whispered the girl barely above her breath.

The Reverend Theodosius smiled grimly.

"So they decided," he remarked. "He confided in me the night before he came to his sad end what he had been doing in Russia. His father had hidden the family heirlooms from the Bolshevists, and our young friend went over to retrieve them. Most ingenious-the way he got them out of Russia. Such a pity he had a lapse with his sleep dope."

And now the Reverend Theodosius was snarling like a mad dog.

"By heavens, girl-do you wonder that I nearly killed that fool Zadowa? The coup of a lifetime-safely brought off. Not a trace of suspicion on me-not a trace. And then, after having got them safely into this country to lose them like that. Why, do you know that one of them was the rose diamond of the Russian crown jew-

He was pacing up and down the room, and for a while she stood watch ing him in silence.

"I'm glad I didn't know about them till now," she said at length. "I might not have stopped you killing him, if I had. And it would have been rather awkward."

He gave a short laugh, and threw the end of his cigar into the grate. "No use crying over spilt milk, my dear. Let's go to bed." But little Janet still stood by the table watching him thoughtfully.

"What are you thinking about?"

"I was thinking about a rather pe culiar coincidence," she answered "You were too worried over quietly. the diamonds to notice it-but it struck me instantly. The leader of this gang-this huge man whom Zadowa killed tonight. Did you notice what his Christian name was? It was Hugh-Zadowa heard one of the others call him by name. Hugh, mon ami; Hugh-and a huge man. A coincidence, I think."

The man gave a short laugh. "A very long one, my dear. Too long to bother about."

"It would be a pity if he was dead," she went on thoughtfully. "I would have liked to see my Hugh Drummond again."

"If he has been killed, if your supposition is correct," returned the man, "it will do something toward reconciling me to the loss of the diamonds. But I don't think it's likely. And incidentally he is the only side-show I am going to allow myself during this trip. Little Janet laughed softly. "I wonder," she said, "I wonder. Let us, as you say, go to bed."

CHAPTER VII

In Which Hugh Drummond Makes a Discovery

The prospect in front of Count Zadowa alias Mr. Atkinson was not a very alluring one, and the more he thought about it the less he l'ked it. Either the diamonds were blown to dust, or they were in the hands of the authorities. In the first event he had the Reverend Theodosius to reckon with; in the second the police. And for preference the police won in a canter.

He was under no delusions, was the hunchback. This mysterious man who signed all his communications by the enigmatic letter X, and whose real appearance was known probably only to the girl who was his constant companion, so wonderful and varied were his disguises, was not a person whom it paid to have any delusions about. With a shudder Count Zadowa remembered the fate of certain men he had known in the past, men who had been employed, even as he was now employed, on one of the innumerable schemes of their chief. No project, from the restoration of a monarchy to the downfall of a business combine, was too great for the man who now called himself the Reverend Theodosius Longmoor. All that mattered was that there should be money in it. Why he should be interesting himself in the spread of Communism in England it was not for Count Zadowa to inquire, even though he was the head of that particular activity. Presumably he was being paid for it by others; it was no business of Count Zadowa's.

And as he undressed that night in the quiet hotel in Bloomsbury where he lived the hunchback cursed bitterly under his breath. It was such a cruel stroke of luck.

He had already decided that his only method lay in going down to the office next morning as usual. He would find it, of course, in the possession of the police, and would be told what had happened. And then he would have to trust to luck to discover what he could.

Punctually at half-past nine the next morning he arrived at 5 Green street. As he had expected, a constable was standing at the door.

"Who are you, sir?" The policeman was barring his entrance.

"My name is Atkinson," said the count, with well-feigned surprise. "May I ask what you're doing here?" "Haven't you heard, sir?" said the constable. "There was a bomb outrage here last night. In your office upstairs." "A bomb outrage?" Mr. Atkinson gazed at the constable in amazement, and a loafer standing by began to laugh.

"Not 'arf, guv'nor," he remarked cheerfully. "The ole ruddy place is

"You dry up," admonished the policeman. "Move along, can't you?" "Orl rite, orl rite," grumbled the other, shambling off. "Not allowed to live soon, we won't be."

"You'd better go up, sir," continued the constable. "The inspector is upstairs."

Mr. Atkinson needed no second in vitation. Viewed by the light of day which came streaming in through the great hole in the wall the ruin was complete. In the center-and it was there Mr. Atkinson's eyes strayed continuously even while he was acknowledging the greetings of the inspector-stood the remnants of the desk. And as he looked at it and faint hope he may have cherished vanished completely. It was literally split to pieces in every direction there was not left a hiding-place for a pea, much less a bag of diamonds.

The inspector was speaking and Ma Atkinson pulled himself together. He had a part to play, and whatever happened no suspicions must be aroused.

"I feel quite staggered, inspector." His glance traveled to a sinister-look ing heap in the corner-a heap rough ly covered with an old rug. The wal above it was stained a dull red, and from under the rug stretched out two long streams of the same colorstreams which were not yet dry.

"What on earth has happened?" "There seems very little doub! about that, sir," remarked the inspec tor. "Evidently their idea was bur-What happened, then, of course, it is hard to say exactly. Presumably they started using explosive

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

TOE MILLER sat on a rickety chair In the "office" of Hicks' elevator dividing his time between whittling a pine stick and picking the snarls out of his ragged unkempt beard. He was a forlorn looking figure, unwashed and unattractive, his lips stained with tobacco juice, and his hands grimy with dirt. How Joe had kept soul and body together during his sixty or more years no one could quite guess, for he had little property and he had never been caught working. Joe really blamed all his indigence and misfortune on luck. "Now there's Bill Smithers," Joe was saying as he rounded his whittling into shape, "he's just rolling in money. He and I started together, and look at me. Nothing that I do ever amounts to anything; whatever he touches turns to money. He's al-

Joe did not remember that Smithers had been a hard worker since he was a boy, that he had saved his money, that he had educated himself, that he knew nere about his particular line of business than anyone in the country. What had been won by shrewd hard sense and regular work Miller attributed to luck.

I should not want to argue that luck never enters into a man's success. Chance often, no doubt, gives a man an opportunity, but it seldom helps him in making the most of it. In these days even oil wells and gold mines are seldom discovered by luck but are located through scientific data and investigation.

I have watched a good many men during the last thirty years, and I have known some who succeeded and others who did not: I have heard men complain of ill-treatment by employers and rail against the ill-luck which they were sure was keeping them down. I am more and more convinced, however, as I have studied the conditions that cause men to rise or which keep them in subordinate or inferior positions that there is very little in luck. Success is almost always inherent in a man's character, is the result of his own strivings and accomplishment.

There are not so very many bargain sales in the market of life. Things may often seem cheap and easily won, but in the end we are likely to get only what we pay for-there is no such thing as luck. The majority of young men going out to try the battle in the world look for the good job, for the unusual chance, for the opportunity that will bring them success and fortune without effort.

There is no such thing as a good job without the excellent man to fill it; no one profession has it much over another excepting as the men in it are superior or otherwise. The good job is the one you make something out of; the lucky chance is the one you work at with energy and intelligence and enthusiasm. And it does not make so much difference where you go, for it is what is in you that determines whether or not the job is good or the chance lucky, (©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

Science Comes to Aid Labor of Shoveling

Have you ever noticed that the hardest part of shoveling in tough material is getting the shovel in? You push and you bang your anatomy against its handle, until part, at least, of a shovelful has been bitten off. But it is hard, killing work, asserts the Scientific American.

But suppose you had a helper whose job it was to strike the rear end of the shovel. All you would have to do would be to hold the shovel and keep it pointing where you wanted it to

Such a consummation is contained in a one-man clay digger recently manufactured. First, there is a pneumatic tool which does not differ greatly from the pneumatic riveter. This forms the handle and strikes 800 sharp blows a minute. Then there is the shovel or spade, very strong and husky-much more so than a common hand shovel. The air line is a flexible hose which attaches to the handle end of the spade, and there is a hand trigger to start and stop the compressed air.

It does not require an engineer to see the potentialities of this combination. Anyone who has watched a pneumatic riveter mash rivets into heads in ten seconds, or a pneumatic chisel wrecking steel work, knows how fast they eat their way through.

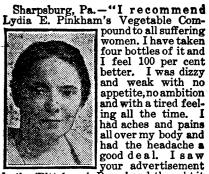

These shovels are not meant for shoveling coal or sand, but for tough jobs. For instance, cutting through frozen ground, tunneling in tough clay or digging postholes in "mean" soil.

Schoolboy's Biography William E. Barton's huge "Life of Abraham Lincoln," which I hope to review in a later issue, reminds me by contrast of the composition on this subject written by a New Haven schoolboy. He said, "Lincoln lived to a green old age and died in 1896. He is as famous in England as in America, Lincoln cathedral being named after him." Shortly after reading this original contribution to biography, I stood in front of that magnificent cathedral, and it seemed to say, "Before Abraham was, I am."-Scribners.
