

JACK MINER ASKS
AID FOR BIRD LIFE

If men and women would treat birds as they deserve to be treated, there would be no need for them to fly from the Arctic to the south each year, said Jack Miner, famous Canadian naturalist, in an address last night at Metropolitan M. E. church, Detroit.

Birds fly long distances for protection from their enemies, he said. If human beings fed them without ulterior motives, birds would come to realize mankind as their friends and they would not need to change their habitats so frequently or fly such long distance.

By "ulterior motives," he referred to those who fed birds for the purpose of shooting them and not with the object of letting them increase.

"Having no book-learning," Miner told his audience, "I was obliged to go out into the fields and the forests and the swamps and observe things for myself. In this way I approached my subject from an unbiased standpoint and learned much that is not scientifically known."

The lecture was illustrated with motion pictures.

Midland Test Well
For Oil Proves Dry

Another oil venture undertaken by the Saginaw Prospecting company, near Midland, has proven to be dry in the Berea sand at a depth of 2,442 feet, some 600 feet deeper than oil has been encountered here in the same formation.

The drilling was undertaken in Midland because of the occasional showings of oil in the numerous salt wells in that locality.

It is possible that the Midland well will be sunk to the Saginaw and Dundee sand levels in an effort to strike oil.

Hints for the Housewife

MENU HINT

Breakfast is a meal that is generally eaten in a hurry and very often with little appetite. It should be made as attractive as possible and the food, while not heavy, should be nourishing and well cooked. The water for the coffee may be put on to boil before you are dressed so that you can make it the minute you are ready. Take a good sized tray and put on it all the things you need for breakfast from the ice box. The oranges may be halved, the milk or cream for the cereal with the cereal dishes and everything that goes with it, should be put on the tray and carried to the table. The table will thus be set in a few minutes—almost quicker than it takes to tell it.

TODAY'S RECIPES.

Cooked Cereal.

The best way to cook cereal for breakfast is to boil in double boiler the previous night and warm thoroughly the next morning. However, many of the modern cereals may be dropped into rapidly boiling water and cooked very quickly. The double boiler, of course, insures against burning.

Soft Boiled Eggs.

Wash the eggs thoroughly the night before if you have time. Then slip them gently into the boiling water and boil the requisite number of minutes to suit the taste of the individuals.

To be palatable toast must not be burned, and on the other hand, it should be well browned and crisp. Young housewives should get in the habit of doing things well. Efficiency is really more essential in home than in office, as badly cooked, unbalanced meals affect the health of the members of the family and prevent them from doing their best work.

SUGGESTIONS

Washing the Curtains.

Take one pair of kitchen, bedroom or bath room curtains each week, rinse in soapy water, tie in a pillow case, with a curtain cord and put in the washing machine with the weekly laundry. This saves time, the daintiest curtain may be laundered without injuring, and your curtains will always be fresh and clean.

A good catsup that may be made any time during the winter is made of one quart cranberries, one cup water, two cups vinegar. Tie in a piece of muslin a few cloves, four allspice, a tablespoon broken stick cinnamon and some mace. Simmer all together until fruit is soft. Press through collander, then add two cups brown sugar and simmer ten minutes longer. Seal.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

The ruby wedding is celebrated at the end of the fortieth year. Jewelry with ruby settings is, of course, appropriate for gifts, but anything in the ruby color may be given and the house where the festivity is to take place should be decorated in the same color, the color scheme being carried out in the menu as far as possible.

Housewife Becomes Head of Large Machine Works

Mrs. Terry Stafford, who operates a machine shop.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 23.—From scrutinizing the hang of curtains and inspecting the polish of floors in a household to supervising the operations of a machine shop is a decided change for a woman of the matronly age. But such a change was successfully made by Mrs. Terry Stafford, widow of the founder of a machine works.

Mr. Stafford was the first motor car builder west of the Mississippi river. At one time he manufactured the Stafford car. Mr. Stafford found, however, he could provide a more profitable business doing machine work for motor car concerns and individual owners.

When Mr. Stafford died in October, 1925, Mrs. Stafford was confronted with the problem of selling the business—the largest of its kind in the city—or continuing it on a paying basis.

"I knew if I sold out, the machinery would have to be sacrificed and many men would be thrown out of work," Mrs. Stafford said. "As Mr. Stafford spent so many years building up the business I decided to continue it, following his policy of giving the best service possible."

It was no easy task for Mrs. Stafford to learn the business. But she dug in and learned the ins and outs of the trade. Learning the trade names of the various operations engaged in by the machine works was like going to school again for Mrs. Stafford.

She is a quiet, unassuming and dignified woman. She has entire charge of the shop. Those under her say she is as efficient in her new work as she was in the former days as mistress of her household.

SPEED OF BIRDS
GAUGED BY AUTO

Scientists have recently conducted numerous experiments to determine the rates of speed at which various species of birds fly. In most of these the automobile has figured as the medium of speed measurement, and though little exact data have been gathered, many fairly accurate estimates have been made and much interesting information acquired.

Professor Lynds Jones of Oberlin, clocked the flight rates of many birds during a recent 11,000-mile national tour made for the purpose of studying bird habits. Despite repeated trials he was able to gauge with absolute accuracy the speed of only one group of birds, a flock of gulls that flew parallel to his course along a Pacific coast highway. The birds made 29 miles an hour, steadily for 20 miles.

Other birds that he paced did not fly with him long enough to give him exact figures although he was able to make some close calculations. He figures that the average speed of most song birds is between 25 and 30 miles an hour.

Other scientists have fixed the flight speed of the English sparrow at 30 miles per hour, as nearly as they could determine, that of the mourning dove at 35 and a tame pigeon at 33.

Allegan Probate Judge
Remembers Youngsters

Probate Judge Charles Thew has decided he will add to each of the 76 mothers who receive mothers' pensions from his office the sum of $2.25. If there is more than one child in the family 25 cents additional will be added for each child, recommending that the additional sum be spent to gladden the hearts of the youngsters at Christmas time. Judge Thew always has been interested in the welfare of children.

School Board Bars
Play Smoking Scenes

The Kalamazoo board of education has banned cigaret smoking and drinking scenes in plays presented in the Central high school auditorium. Considerable discussion preceded this edict. The board members after consideration deemed it unwise to allow plays depicting smoking and drinking to be given when efforts already have been made to keep high school students from smoking.

Another prohibition yarn from England runs as follows: "What was it the rich man called for in hell?" demanded the frantically excited temperance lecturer. "Was it whiskey? No! Was it rum? No. It was water, clear, cold, sparkling water from some brook or mountain stream. Now, brothers, what does that show?" And the mild person in the crowd remarked: "It shows where all you teetotal fellows go to!"

FEDERAL ROUTE
WORRIES TOWN

Towns on M13 north of Cadillac which will be cut off the route of the proposed federal highway US131 as it turns off to M11 at a point near Fife lake are not at all pleased, and want the tentative route changed.

According to local highway authorities, word from the department at Washington is that final action has not been entered on the records but as Michigan now has a larger percentage of the federal interstate highway system than some other states it is unlikely applications for minor changes would receive favorable consideration.

Northern points evidently feel some doubt they will continue to receive federal aid if their cities are not on the interstate route but it appears the aid is giving on principal trunklines, of which M13 is one, and the new method of designation by federal numerals in no way would interfere with federal help where it now is being received.

All Hands Turn to Help with Church

Virtually every able-bodied man in this transplanted French-Canadian village of Lake Leelanau volunteered to cut wood when it was discovered the supply for St. Mary's Catholic church and St. Mary's convent had become dangerously low.

A committee of business men and farmers solicited their neighbors, a farmer offered standing timber, women served hot coffee and 75 choppers and sawyers felled, cut, split and stacked 60 cords of wood in seven hours.

POEMS I LOVE

"Hora Christi," by Alice Brown.

To me, this is one of the most beautiful Christmas poems ever written. It appeared originally in Harper's Magazine, and I committed it to memory. Afterwards, I heard others quote it, and it has never left me.

Sweet is the time for joyous folk
Of gifts and minstrelsy;
Yet I, O lowly-hearted One,
Crave but Thy company.
On lonesome road, beset with dread,
My questing lies afar.
I have no light, save in the east
The gleaming of Thy star.

In cloistered aisles they keep today
Thy feast, O living Lord!
With pomp of banner, pride of song,
And stately sounding word.
Mute stand the kings of power and place,
While priests of holy mind
Dispense Thy blessed heritage
Of peace to all mankind.

I know a spot where budless twigs
Are bare above the snow.
And where sweet winter-loving birds
Flit softly to and fro;
There with the sun for altar-fire,
The earth for kneeling-place,
The gentle air for choristr,
Will I adore Thy face.

Loud, underneath the great blue sky,
My heart shall pean sing,
The gold and myrrh of meekest love
Mine only offering.
Bliss of Thy birth shall quicken me;
And for Thy pain and dole
Tears are but vain, so I will keep
The silence of the soul.

By MME. LISBETH

The brigand belt, illustrated above, is said to be a new fad of fair women. In reality these belts are a flashback for they were worn a number of years ago.

As pictured the belt is made of patent leather but they are made of all materials and range in width from five to eight inches. They are worn with afternoon or evening clothes.

FASHION WHIMSIES

After a lapse of years broadcloth is once more being used for evening wraps. White broadcloth with pliable gold elather was used by Lelong to make one of his loveliest ensembles. Tangerine duveten outlind with black satin makes a handsome negligee in wraparound style. If you wish to further enhance the color scheme black embroidery and appliques may be added in border design along the hem and down the front.

A practical type combination brassiere and girdle is being sold in double layers of net in white or pastel shades. It crosses behind and the tapering ends are finished with a loop and fasten under the arm. There is a short tape in front to which the net is gathered, giving a fitted effect. The fancy ones have lace trimmings while the plainer models are finished with linen binding.

The latest and most novel idea in boutonieres is a flower of colored glass beads, like jewels, shells and mother of pearl wired in the form of natural flowers. These are small and dainty, but the large flowers, conventionalized chrysanthemums and a variety of other blossoms in silver gauze or feathers, are also worn. They are now being successfully done in beautiful colors.

Lace trimmed georgette dresses with flared skirt and lace appearing in flounces on the skirt and in back yokes are favorites. Black is liked also orchid and pale green in combination with metallic lace.

A new note in rainy weather wear was a two-piece suit of rubberized crepe de chine consisting of a jacket in blue and pleated skirt of mustard color with a black hem.

A new fad for the smart woman to indulge in is to consult a style advisor who, for a liberal fee, of course will make a study of her client's personality and prescribe the kind of clothes she should wear.

Suitable for the debutante is a frock of red and blue changeable taffeta in bouffant style with a deep berth of gold lace and three red roses at the waist. The skirt is faced with American beauty satin.

LIVING
LOVING
BY FLORENCE SMITH VINCENT

"HERE COMES THE BRIDE!"

Youth may possess gold and silver and jewels rare, but unless it knows romance, not yet has youth had from Life all that Life can offer. And all this finery becomes to it as so much brass and tinkling cymbals.

For it is love that makes the world go round, and it is romance that sets the mighty force in motion.

How are youth and romance to meet? Where and when?

In loggia bathed in moonlight! By steamer rail in bright noonday sun! On cool woodland trail at break of dawn!

Who knows? What matter details, so long as the meeting becomes a fait accompli? It is only when youth blindly, perhaps willfully, passes romance by, that the kind gods veil their faces.

However preliminaries differ, in essentials all that follows after is much the same.

First come the carefree days when man and maid find it pleasant enough merely to be together. Light banter. Lifting laughter. Why take things seriously when life is such fun?

But fate takes revenge upon triflers.

Less heedless times follow. The word spoken in idle jest takes on deeper meaning. Over nothing at all—just footsteps on the walk, jingling of telephone, peal of bell—breath catches in throat. Now ever behind the smile is the heart throb. "He loves me—he loves me not!"

Doubt assails hope until—The hour of hope's triumph, of glorious surety—"He loves me!"

Hearts are trumps, but at this stage of the game the wise lover leads with a diamond. While the youngman's fancy turns to love the older man's is concerned with more prosaic matters.

"Can you take care of my daughter?" Traditional fatherly and fearfully personal question. "I'll do the best I can, sir. At least I can help your daughter to take care of herself. And she's welcome to all of my name if she'll take it."

Thus answers the modern suitor. And it is about what had expected. After all, it might be worse, and so he gives his consent and mother adds her blessing.

A rare day. Skies of azure. Sun shining as brightly as Sun can! One house of all others with a festive air.

Gay awning stretching to the street! Wide doorway, invitingly open. Guests entering.

Within, a table laid with tempting viands, smilax trailing over snowy cloth, frosted cake in the centre. Glittering array of treasure in a room apart.

Chattering. Laughter. Steps passing and repassing up and down the winding stairway. Whiff of orange blossom.

Floating chiffon, rainbow colored. Belated, breathless bridesmaid. Suddenly an expectant hush. Low sweet strains of music.

Rapt attention—"Here comes the bride!" Casual notice—"And here comes the groom!"

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, romance without end.

The prologue is over! The play is on!

WEEK OF JANUARY 9

Very close to Sunday of the week beginning January 9 we are expecting the weather in Michigan to become more settled with sunshine during the day and moonlight during early part of night. The temperatures at this time will range above the seasonal normal.

During Monday and Tuesday there will be renewed storms of rain, sleet or snow and high winds, followed by a small drop in the temperature. Thermal readings following this storm area are not expected to range much below 15 degrees above zero, with the probabilities they will not even drop that much.

Temperatures will again be up by about Wednesday, should they show a tendency to drop previous to this so that readings over most parts of the lower peninsula of Michigan will be considerably above the freezing mark.

During the greater part of Thursday and Friday there will be storms of wind, rain, sleet or snow in many parts of the state. Precipitation will not be as heavy during this storm period as during first week of month.

We believe the main characteristics of this storm center will be cold weather that is expected to follow.

Overdoing? Hurry, Worry and Overwork Bring Heavy Strain.

MODERN life throws a heavy burden on our bodily machinery. The eliminative organs, especially the kidneys, are apt to become sluggish. Retention of excess uric acid and other poisonous waste often gives rise to a dull, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backaches and headaches. That the kidneys are not functioning perfectly is often shown by burning or scanty passage of secretions. More and more people are learning to assist their kidneys by the occasional use of Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. Ask your neighbor!

LEWIS

"She will, if I do it every night. She's bound to catch the idea in time, if we don't get her some other way first. The only trouble is that somebody else might catch it, too. Still, we have to take some chances. You haven't thought of anything she'd recognize you by, have you?"

"Nothing that would do any good. We did have a secret alphabet when she was about twelve, and used to write each other notes in it."

"Bully!"

"We used to read it like print, but I'm not sure I could remember it now, and probably she's forgotten it, too. Besides, we couldn't get a note to her."

"We might. You never can tell. Let's write one or two, anyhow, so we'll be ready if the chance comes."

Not having provided themselves with stationery, he brought her some wrapping paper from the kitchen and bade her write down her alphabet while he changed into dry clothes, forgetting in the zest of the game his adjurations regarding her rest.

At first she could remember only that she had originally evolved a code from algebraic characters, supplemented by similar arbitrary signs culled from the back pages of a dictionary, and that the symbol of equality had been used to separate the words. But by the time Piggy came downstairs again, arrayed in the habiliments of his normal station in life, she had recalled most of it, and impelled by his urgency, finally filled in the remaining letters. Looking over her shoulder, this is what he saw:

(-)-X-A-O
X-V-A-Z+V-V
X-X-X+V
O+>-O-A
X-X-X
X-A->

"Three cheers!" He reached into his pocket for a notebook.

"What good will that do you?" she asked, as he began copying the characters.

"Dunno. Might come in handy. Now let's write her some notes. If one doesn't get through, another may. Better use torn bits of this brown paper, so if anybody else finds 'em they'll look like scraps of something. You write: 'Here waiting chance. Listen for whistle. Show light.' I'll write 'Night whistle signal. Answer with light.' Sign 'em both R." After experimenting a little, he added: "That sign between the words is a give-away. Shows it's a code. Better split 'em up into several lines. I'll show you."

Having written his message, he looked at it, grinning. "It will take some thinking to decode that. Golly! this cipher's a pippin! It's so darn arbitrary. Look." He handed her a scrap of paper bearing the following legend:

x b c d e f g h i j k
l m n o p q r s t u v
w x y z
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10
11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20
21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30
31 32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40
41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50
51 52 53 54 55 56 57 58 59 60
61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70
71 72 73 74 75 76 77 78 79 80
81 82 83 84 85 86 87 88 89 90
91 92 93 94 95 96 97 98 99 100

"That'll keep G. A. guessing awhile."

Roberta laughed. "It does look cryptic. If only she remembers it—and if we can get it to her!"

"Sure we'll get it to her."

He placed the notes carefully in his bill-fold, and considerably after midnight, cheered by his confidence, Roberta went to bed and to sleep.

Th next morning, wincing from his lame muscles, Piggy visited the village store in a heavy downpour, to make inquiries about obtaining an automobile license. He learned that application should be made to the sheriff at the lower village, officially entitled Fitzwilliam Depot, a smaller settlement hugging the railway tracks—Fitzwilliam proper, like many New England hamlets, being situated at some distance from the station. When he returned to the house for the car, he said to Roberta, with a chuckle:

"We've got to watch our step. They asked me at the store who was sick over here."

"Sick? Why?"

"Some woman looked out last night and saw a light in this house as late as twelve o'clock, and it's all over the village. They thought somebody must be dying. I told 'em you suffered from insomnia and sometimes sat up all night reading, but it's a good tip. When things begin to pop, we'll douse the lights. I may drive over to Keene after I see about this license and scout around a little. Perhaps I'll meet up with my friend Cody. Back when I get here."

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

Left alone with Janet, Roberta, refreshed by sound sleep and again buoyant, encouraged the old woman to talk. Already won by the girl's frank, friendly manner—though far from admitting this in words—and sympathizing with her anxiety for her sister, Janet vouchsafed a series of tales about the lad and his parents. At length, when the barriers seemed down, Roberta inquired, with a careless air:

"By the way, what's Mr. Brazenose's name? I've always heard him called Piggy, which is rather awful for a man like him. Is it Pygmalion?"

"Ask him," quoth Janet. As has been said, except for a strong burr and an occasional Scottish locution, she usually spoke uncolored English save in moments when excitement brought the dialect of her childhood to her tongue, or when she indulged herself with intimates. "His mother gave him his name, and I take it ill of him that he doesn't like it for her sake. Maybe he'll tell ye but ye'll not get it from me."

"Check!" said Roberta to herself, her lids veiling twinkling eyes. Aloud she returned: "Oh, well, it doesn't matter. I just wondered."

But the virus of curiosity was working in her blood, and undeterred by the sad fate that once upon a time had overtaken several ladies of similar purpose, she resolved to gain admittance to the secret closet. That she might leave her head suspended by its long brown hair in the grizzly chamber occurred to her no more than to her unfortunate prototypes, and in any case she would have pictured herself as a triumphant blending of two legendary characters—she who lived to tell of turning that portentous key, and the lady who won a sultan's favor by her skilled loquacity. Not for nothing was Roberta a daughter of Eve and young.

Meanwhile, Percival Galahad, in the guise of Peter Brown, having learned from the sheriff that he might expect his New Hampshire license plates within a few days, drove to Keene, where he invested in rubber to the extent of a coat and boots, foreseeing a possible series of wet nights on Lookout Hill. Then he lounged about town, making acquaintances among the tradesmen and spreading the tidings that Mrs. Smith had settled in Fitzwilliam for the winter. When he was told that Wednesday afternoon was a half holiday and that all the shops would close, he abandoned his plan to remain through the day in the hope that Cody would appear, and was about to return to his base when he caught sight of Scott's man guiding a high, box-like Ford through the main street.

"Hey, Jim!" he yelled.

Cody waved a hand and turned the nose of his vehicle toward the curb, parking in the local fashion. Piggy surveyed the conveyance with a humorously saturnine eye.

"Come to that, have you?"

"Well, the old man keeps one up here for marketing and such. These roads shake a real car all to pieces. Lizzies ain't so bad for a hick country."

"Maybe. Never drove one myself." Having thus established his own lofty position, Piggy tactfully came down to common footing. "How about a drink?"

"Surest thing you know! Guess I've got time." Cody looked at his watch before leading the way to a barroom. At that time these social centers still flourished, even in New Hampshire. "What you don't here on a day like this?"

"Tryin' to forget Fritz. What brought you in?"

"Errands for the women. Everythin' in this burg shuts up tight Wednesday afternoons, an' o' course they remembered at the last minute that they was all out o' yarn and embroidery cotton an' stuff. Couldn't possibly ha' thought of it yesterday, when I had to come in anyhow. They ain't got nothin' else to do, an' they make enough fancy junk to stock a dozen church affairs. Miss Scott knits her head off an' Celia embroiders things. Gawd, it's a gay life!"

Piggy's eyes lighted with a triumphant gleam and he resolved to stick tighter than a brother to Cody while he made purchases. Concealing his elation under a sardonic grin, he drawled:

"Say, you oughter try livin' with a weepin' widow for a while. Talk about a gay life! Still, you can't blame the poor thing. She's all broke up. But it's an ill wind that blows nobody good. I never thought I'd run across you today. Know yet how long you've goin' to stay?"

"All this week, I guess. I hear the old man talkin' to the office by phone this mornin', an' he said he wouldn't be back 'til Monday, unless sum'n happened wrong down there. 'Fine! I won't die of lonesomeness before next week, anyhow. Say, s'pose I chase around with you while you do your errands, an' then we have lunch at the hotel?"

"Well—I guess that'll be all right. I'll have to call up the old man an' make sure."

"Gee! he must be a slave-driver! Don't you have no time off at all?"

"Yep. One half-day a week, but this ain't it. I'll tell him I run across a friend from home."

After absorbing a small amount of stimulant, Cody made his purchases, with the other in close and observant attendance. This accomplished, they went to the hotel, where Piggy obligingly offered to take charge of the numerous parcels when his friend went to the telephone.

Unfortunately, Celia's embroidery cotton and her mother's wools had been wrapped together, and the conspirator could think of no plausible excuse for opening the large parcel in the hotel office, where he sat waiting for Cody. He contrived, however, to slip the twine off at one end and loosen the folds of paper enough to smuggle in one of the cipher notes, hoping that it would meet the girl's eye. He also surreptitiously consulted his notebook, after restoring the twine to its proper place, and on the outside of the same parcel he penciled:

"The unknown quantity, plus is greater than, plus, equals is greater than."

If by any chance Celia saw this and remembered the cipher, "Here. R." would give her courage, while to others the symbols would convey no meaning.

Arising with a grin as Cody approached, he slipped notebook and pencil into a side pocket, and they went to the dining room. Thereafter the conversation was all of automobiles and adventures in which these had played a part, and fearing a reaction of suspicion after Celia had disappeared if he displayed too much curiosity now, the stranger asked no questions about persons and conditions at Birchwood.

But it was a radiant smile he gave Roberta upon his return that afternoon announcing: "Luck's with us." He was less certain of this, however, when he stood on the hill that night in a pouring rain, with aching muscles, and whistled his signal to the black and unresponsive void. The second night and the third were like unto the first, except that by Friday the sky began to clear.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

Saturday morning he and Roberta, somewhat depressed in spirit, watching from their hilltop for signs of Scott's departure, saw the station cab drive up to the door. A man sprang from it and ran up the steps.

"That's Clif!" Roberta gasped. "Peter, he must be hunting for me!"

"Ow," said Piggy, with deep feeling.

Warned by the tumult of the chained dogs, Scott, also, had seen Nixon's approach, and had sent his wife and daughter upstairs on the pretext that Clif was coming to discuss important business with him. Suspecting all walls, however, even his own, of auricular properties, he had no fancy for conducting within them what might well prove a stormy interview with this young man. Therefore he intercepted the maid who came to answer the bell, sent her back to the kitchen, and opened the door himself, grimly confronting the haggard man without.

"Well, Clif?"

"Is Roberta here?" Nixon moved as if to enter, but the other's huge bulk filled the doorway.

"That name is never mentioned in my house," Scott said, scowling. "If you've got to use it, we'll step out on the terrace. And keep your voice down. Celia's not well and I don't want her excited—nor my wife, either. But if you've come up here," he added, closing the door and leading the way to the outer edge of the terrace, "with any idea of interfering in a family matter—well, you'd better not, that's all."

"I haven't. Your affairs are none of my business. I've come to find Roberta. Where is she?"

Scott studied him keenly. "Don't you know?"

"I do not. But I'm going to." Nixon made no attempt to conceal his anger. "What have you done with her?"

"Not a thing, Clif. I haven't seen her. Have you?"

"No. She's disappeared."

Her father chuckled. "Called your bluff, did she? Thought you said you were going to marry her?"

"I was—and am, when I find her. That's what she came over for—to marry me."

"Hmph! That isn't the story she told when she got here. She said she'd come to get some client named Mrs. Mills, and was going to sail again with this woman today."

"What? Then you have seen her?"

"Not I!" Scott repeated the detective's report, ending with Roberta's disappearance at the Pennsylvania Station and the failure of Washington detectives to identify her there. "So, if you do find her, let me know, will you?" he continued. "If she hasn't sailed today, I want to know where she is and what she's up to. Have you any idea who the man was who met her at the Grand Central and took her to lunch?"

"Yes," Nixon was frowning perplexedly. "At least—No, I don't know who he is, but I sent him with a message for her. I was to meet her myself and we were to be married at once."

"Had she agreed to that?" her father interrupted.

"Certainly. It was all arranged by letter and cable. At the last moment my secretary called me on long distance and told me a directors' meeting had been called—but I needn't explain that to you." He shot an irate glance at Scott, who smiled, still not perceiving that one of his chickens had returned to its roost in the proverbial manner. "I had to hustle like the deuce to catch a train that would get me home in time for the meeting, and I also had to get word to Roberta, because she was to wait for me at the station in case I was delayed. I hadn't expected to get here until that morning. I was afraid a messenger boy wouldn't find her, but at the ferry I saw a good-looking young chap—tall, brown hair, gray eyes, well dressed—gentleman."

Scott nodded. "That's the man. Ever see him before?"

"Never. But I explained enough of the situation and described Roberta, without using any names, not even my own. He promised to find her, and to tell her to let me know where she was and that I'd be back in two or three days. This is the first assurance I've had that anybody met her. Of course, it's possible that when he got there he found he knew her. I can't see any other explanation of their going to lunch together." Neither man suspected that the usually canny Roberta had arrived penniless. "I got back Wednesday, expecting to find a note from her at the club, telling me where she was, but there wasn't a word. I've been to every hotel in New York, and she isn't there. None of her friends knew that she was in town. I've telephoned to a dozen or more of them. Now, where is she?"

"Give it up," said Scott.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Scott and Nixon recognized that each seemed to be telling the truth, yet both were suspicious. Nixon, aware that Roberta's father had deliberately arranged the director's meeting to prevent his meeting her on her arrival believed not only that Scott would feign ignorance of her whereabouts even if he knew it, but also that he was capable of locking up the elder daughter as her had the younger.

Moreover, guiltily conscious that he had permitted business to supersede love at a critical moment, he suspected that Roberta had revenged herself for his neglect by setting out upon the expedition of succor against which he had warned her. In this case, Scott would inevitably connect him with the attempt, which brought him back to business considerations again, and to consequences not to be contemplated. Giddy from trying to maintain his equilibrium amid these complicated, interlacing circles of thought, he realized that he must guard his tongue.

Scott, equally in the dark as to what had become of Roberta, doubted that a person capable of such filial apostasy as hers would keep faith with anyone. But he was fully cognizant of her powers of attraction and cajolery, as well as of Nixon's long courtship, and he was by no means certain that this move was not part of a shrewd plan to get into communication with Celia.

Therefore they eyed each other warily, and five hundred yards away in an air line, the object of their discussion, watching through the glass, whispered to Piggy, "Oh, I wish we had something to help us hear them, to."

"If she was going to marry you," Scott went on after a pause, "why did she land at Quebec? Why didn't she come straight in at the front door?"

Naturally, considering the terms upon which Roberta had agreed to this marriage, Nixon knew quite well why she had chosen to arrive by the back door; but his promised participation in her project was the last thing he wished Scott to suspect, so he temporized.

"Perhaps she wanted to see Quebec. I believe she'd never been there. Or possibly some one she knew was coming that way. Anyhow, she called me to meet that train—and I didn't." The other's eyes gleamed at the evasion, but he made no comment and Nixon went on, frowning. "What I don't understand is this talk about a client in Washington and sailing today. Why, she couldn't have had any such plan! She was to marry me Monday!"

"Well, that just shows you," Scott shrugged. "Probably she had more than one string to her bow. It's like her. You'd better be thankful that she threw you down before you married her, instead of afterward."

"I dare say she thinks I threw her down," Nixon mentioned, morosely. "Maybe she does. But I'd say, knowing her, that it's more likely she never intended to marry you at all."

"I swear she did! She promised—and she's no liar! I thought some thing might have happened to her—some accident—but none of the hospitals know anything about her."

"Good Lord! Have you been hunting through them, too?"

"I've done everything I could think of—except advertise."

"Well, for God's sake don't do that!"

"I'm going to find her." The young man's tone was dogged.

"All right, find her. Marry her, if you want to, and more fool you! But you see to it that my name—and she still bears my name—doesn't get into print in this business. Understand?"

Nixon nodded, flushing as he recognized his master's voice, and Scott turned suddenly suave. "Sorry I can't invite you in, Clif, but Celia's in pretty bad shape. She's gone to pieces nervously and we're keeping her very quiet. She isn't allowed to see anyone. Let me know if you find Roberta, will you? I'll do the same by you."

"Will you?" Nixon regarded him searchingly and Scott laughed.

"Sure I will! You'll wish I hadn't, if you marry her, but that's your funeral. If you're hunting for trouble, that's the way to find it. All I want is to make sure that she lets me and mine alone."

Nixon immediately departed, and Scott stood for a long time on the terrace, deep in thought. The affair was baffling, like Roberta herself; therefore irritating. On the one hand, not knowing—unless the detective had lied—that she was followed, she had fully outlined her plans to the unidentified man at the Waldorf and had carried them out to the extent of ordering her luggage sent to the Pennsylvania and buying a ticket for Washington. Perhaps she really had taken that train, her small figure hidden by the crowd at either end from the eyes of the watchers. This solution seemed to stretch the arm of coincidence abnormally, though not beyond the limit of possibility.

It doesn't do much good to talk to the average man for his own good.

PETOSKEY RECALLS MARSHALL'S VISITS

The invitation extended to President Coolidge to spend his vacation next summer at Mackinac Island readily recalls in Petoskey's civic memory the days when it entertained the late Vice President Thomas R. Marshall, who spent more than 20 consecutive summers here.

Mr. Marshall began his summer pilgrimages to Petoskey while he practiced law at Columbia City, Ind., and continued them through his term as governor of Indiana and vice president of the United States, always stopping at the Cushman house except for the last year when the illness of Mrs. Marshall's mother forced the family to live in a house on the Lake Michigan shore.

It was on the wide colonial veranda of the Cushman house the late vice president is said to have first made his most famous remark: "What the country needs most is a good 5-cent cigar." He was very democratic, would converse with anybody any time or sit alone on the veranda or lawn gazing at Lake Michigan across a couple of Petoskey's city blocks, but with him a vacation was a vacation and that meant getting away from politics more than anything else.

Mackinaw an Hour Away.

Mr. Marshall had one favorite spot on the landscape here, a high hill on the old Earle farm about seven miles northeast of the city, and he was prone to remark that some day his favorite spot, because of the marvelous view, would be the world's finest summer resort.

Mackinaw City is just an hour's drive from here. Thence one may reach Mackinac Island by ferry. Should President Coolidge accept the Michigan invitation he undoubtedly will view this country of which the beloved Indiana Democrat was so fond.

Committee Selected to Settle Garment Workers' Strike

LOVE ROW SUIT MAY BE SETTLED

The $500,000 love balm suit of Louise C. Anderson, wife of a Detroit bond salesman, against Mrs. Florence S. Bardeen, widow of a wealthy paper manufacturer of Otsego, may be settled out of court, it was indicated.

The case is on the docket for the present term of Circuit Court here, but no move has been made by attorneys on either side to have it called for trial. And now that the jury panel has been discharged, the case cannot be brought up before late in February.

Detroit and Allegan lawyers interested in the case admitted they were working on a settlement.

Dr. Welsh Dies at Grand Rapids

Dr. D. Emmet Welsh, physician and surgeon and former president of the Michigan State Medical society, died at his home here. Born in Columbia, Pa., Dr. Welsh attended the Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia, graduating at the age of 21. After practicing at Latrobe, Pa., for several years, he came to Grand Rapids, where he has resided since. He had held every office in the state medical society, and in 1914 was honored with a fellowship in the American College of Surgeons. Dr. Welsh was known as the oldest pastmaster of a blue lodge of Masons in Grand Rapids, having served as master of the Latrobe, Pa., lodge, while a resident there. Surviving are his widow and one son, D. Emmet Welsh, jr., of Detroit.

Newaygo Will Keep Its Roads Well Plowed Out

The county road commission has ordered the county snowplows out on the roads for the winter. Storms of the past week, while they have not blocked any roads, tended to fill up the cuts to some extent. The commission has decided to keep the roads plowed out down to the roadbed so that when the thaw comes in spring the roads will be more passible.

The trunklines are in good shape as the snow has filled up the many chuck holes resulting from the heavy rains of October and November.

Only Few Pass State's Pharmacy Examinations

Lansing—Forty-five of one hundred thirty-two candidates for Michigan registered pharmacist certificates succeeded in passing recent state examination, H. H. Hofman, director of the state bureau of pharmacy, announced Tuesday.

Of 94 applicants who wrote the registered assistant examination only 60 passed.

Newly elected officers of the state board of pharmacy are: President, James E. Way, Jackson; vice president, J. C. Dykema, Grand Rapids.

Among those who passed the pharmacist examination were: William Kolander, Grand Rapids; Donald Roxburgh, Traverse City; Claude Vanderleest, Grand Rapids; Gordon Munder, Big Rapids.

Veteran Master of Lake Boat Dies

James W. Bennett, for nearly 40 years a captain on the Great Lakes, died at his home, 1556 Beniteau avenue, after a week's illness. He was 70 years old.

Captain Bennett was born at Huron, O., and came to Michigan as a young man. He started his marine career on his father's tug at Mackinac Island, where his parents conducted a hotel, Bennett hall. When this vessel went out of commission, he commanded other tugs on the Great Lakes.

When they were taken out of service he sailed a number of freighters on the lakes. At one time he was in charge of the mail boat C. F. Bielman.

Captain Bennett was unmarried and no known relatives. He was a member of the Elks for many years.

Goodrich to Improve South Haven Lake Line

Officials of the Goodrich Steamship line have been in South Haven surveying facilities at the municipal dock with a view to establishing another boat line from South Haven to Chicago. The 3,000 passenger steamer Theodore Roosevelt will be placed on the run next summer under present plans.

Fire Wrecks Business Block at Kalamazoo; Loss Is $300,000

After a 15-hours' battle, the Kalamazoo fire department extinguished the last traces of a fire which swept the Velleman block in the downtown district, causing a loss conservatively estimated at $300,000.

The fire, the worst in the city's history since the Burdick hotel burned 18 years ago, apparently started in the basement. The elevator shaft provided a draft that quickly converted the interior of the four-story building into a fiery furnace. The firemen were hampered greatly by the intense cold which froze particles of the water streams before they reached the blazing structure. Much of the damage was caused by smoke and water in the adjoining stores, which were at the height of the Christmas shopping season.

Seventeen buildings were imperiled by the fire, which was confined largely to the Velleman block because of the absence of any wind.

The fire was the second disastrous blaze here within two weeks, the McDonald drug store and the Kresge five and ten having been destroyed December 4 at a loss of about $130,000. Speculation was rife here today as to whether the two fires indicate a revival of the mysterious blazes which last winter and spring consumed three large downtown churches and a number of lodge halls.

Montcalm Will Try Farm Agent 3 Months

Willard Cribbs, regional extension leader of Michigan State college will devote his entire time as county agent of Montcalm county the next three months, beginning Jan. 1.

He will make an effort to interest Montcalm farmers in county agent promotional work and hopes to interest them in an all-year agent. The county has been without an agent for two years.

STATE THRIVES ON ELECTRICITY

"The state of Michigan is thriving on a diet of electric power and its ability to consume seems to be unlimited. During the 12 months ending with November, the state used half a billion more kilowatt-hours than in the corresponding previous year."

This was the report of D. E. Byerley of Adrian, president of the Michigan Electric Light association, following receipt of figures on the state's use of power, compiled by the United States Geological Survey.

Mr. Byerley reported that the consumption of electricity for the period covered by the report was 3,397,078,000 kilowatt-hours, compared with 2,937,984,000 for the period ending November, 1925. The gain was 459,094,000 kilowatt-hours, or 15 per cent.

Water powers of the state produced 773,000,000 kilowatt-hours, which was 75,000,000 more than in the previous year. Yet, according to Mr. Byerley, this represented only 22.8 per cent of the total requirement.

"No one type of service is responsible for the gain," said Mr. Byerley. "More electricity was used in homes, more lines were built to reach towns and villages not previously served, more factories and farms harnessed their machines to motors, more streets and highways were lighted, more advertising signs and store lighting contributed to retail merchandising. Many miles of lines were built to serve the rapidly developing resort section."

"It should be appreciated that this tremendous increase in demand had to be anticipated and planned for, so that it would be ready when needed. Our engineers report that the coming year will call for another increase at least as great as the one just recorded."

Driver Dies as Auto Derails Freight Car

William J. Burman, 46 years old, was killed when the automobile in which he was distributing newspapers crashed into the forty-sixth car of a 65-car freight train early yesterday near Tekonsha at a Michigan Central crossing.

One truck of the freight car hit by Burman's automobile jumped the rails and ran along the ties for a mile regaining the tracks at the next crossing. The wheels of the car clipped the ends of the tie bolts and railroad men said that they could not understand how the train came through safely. Inspectors in the Jackson yards discovered the circumstances after examining the freight car's wheels.

Burman's body was found in the wreckage of his automobile by J. T. West of Jackson, and Esley White of Lansing, who were distributing Detroit Sunday newspapers. Burman was a cousin of the late Bob Burman, noted automobile racer who was killed in a California road race some years ago.

Osceola Will Keep Three Highways Open This Year

Work on the state roads within Osceola county started last week. Fred A. Johnson, county superintendent of maintenance had trucks with snow removal equipment busy for first work of the season. M13, M20 and M66 in Osceola county are expected to be kept open to travel all winter. Last season M13 was the only road on the snow removal plan. State highway department records show M13 was open 98 per cent of last winter.

Fourteen thousand feet of snow fences have been placed along the three trunklines where the drifting has been bad. The county owns equipment values at $16,000, which will operate night and day as soon as the roads become threatened. The equipment includes a tractor with rotary plow and two-three-ton trucks with scrapers.

Evart will be the headquarters for the tractor as soon as heavy snowfall calls it into use.

Braves Waves, Ice To Carry Woman To Medical Care

Fighting his way through floating ice and a heavy head sea, Capt. Tracy Grosvenor drove his 32-foot gasoline boat from North Manitou island, 14 miles off Leland, to carry Mrs. Oscar Grant, wife of a coast guardsman, to a hospital for an emergency operation.

There is no doctor on North Manitou and a diagnosis was made over submarine telephone by Dr. Fred Murphy of Cedar. Dr. Murphy was at the dock here when the boat arrived and hurried the patient to Traverse City. Her condition is serious. Capt. Grosvenor returned to the island at once, carrying a 10-day accumulation of mail.

Sells Wife But Gets Only Down Payment

Ed Whittlake, lanky cowpuncher, was on his way back to the prairie lands of Kila, Mont., today minus a wife and filled with regret.

Whittlake sold his wife to a Lansing admirer for $50, he told the police. Ten dollars was the down payment but when he went back for the other $40, he discovered his wife and her purchaser had left town, he said.

"Fifty dollars was a fair price but I guess I'll have to be satisfied with the $10," the westerner complained. "I'm going back to rustle cattle and forget women."

Police arrested Whittlake yesterday morning at the Union Station on a charge of loitering. He said he was looking for the man who bought his wife and jumped the payments. He refused to name the purchaser.

After questioning, he was released and boarded the first train west.

Manistee Lineman Gets 33,000 Volts, But Lives

Although he grasped a guy wire short circuited on a high tension line carrying 33,000 volts John Martin, a lineman living at Covington, Ind., suffered nothing more than burns on his hands.

The shock knocked Martin from the pole on which he was working but in falling he landed across another guy wire, creating a short circuit, the current passing through his body and both hands. Martin is employed by the Hoosier Engineering Co. on construction work for the Michigan United Light & Power Co. of Manistee.

ALLEGAN FURNITURE FACTORIES COMBINE

It is announced officially the Baker & Co. interests will not be withdrawn from Allegan, but will be expanded.

Negotiations affecting the Jewett Radio Co. property have been completed and the property is being taken over under a lease and purchase agreement. This factory, with the Allegan Furniture shops and Baker & Co. are to be combined in one organization, to be known as the Baker Furniture factories. These three properties are to be operated as one unit with Hollis S. Baker president and general manager. All three offices will be combined in one of the Baker & Co. plant and the general control handled from that point.

The individual management of each factory will not be changed, although all purchasing will be handled from one office. This centralizing of activities will give opportunities for many economies in operation and for future development.

To Erect New Buildings.
Improvements in the way of additional buildings and equipment will be made very soon and it is expected to expand the business of these properties. This probably will mean a working force of 500 men eventually.

The increased capacity will allow the lines manufactured to be broadened out so as to cover almost all household needs.

The Jewett factory will be placed in commission next Monday, making chairs and furniture and later other lines. This plant also will be used for making the furniture for the 500 staterooms of the new passenger steamer, Malolo, now being built by William Cramp & Sons, shipbuilders, at Philadelphia. This contract was obtained several months ago, but was held up for a time. It will be completed by April 1.

Sheriff Probes School House Orgy

Arrests of several persons who participated in a drunken brawl, using a country schoolhouse, near Jackson, in which to hold the orgy, is predicted by sheriff's officers following their investigation of the affair.

According to a complaint by Mrs. Bessie Jackson Crawford, county school commissioner, the Robinson fractional school No. 4, in Sandstone township, was broken into some time over the week-end.

Windows were broken and much damage done to the interior of the building, officers say, and several glasses and empty containers that bore traces of liquor were found.

THERE'S A DIFFERENCE

in the feeding proposition on nearly every farm; and how near you come to getting the proper feed for your cows and poultry to meet YOUR requirements is the difference between profit and loss for you. In both poultry and dairy feeds we have a ration that is best adapted to your needs. A car just unloaded and we can supply you with whatever you want in this line.

CAUTION!

Remember, too, that there is a difference in Kentucky coals; we lead them all in quality and price.
