Training and Pruning Vines
About the middle of February we are ready to prune again. This time each of the canes that has grown out along the lower wire should be cut back to two to four buds each and the upright cane should be cut off just above the top wire. During the growing season several shoots will be produced along the lower wire and also buds. Now we have our vine trained to one upright stem with four canes coming off at right angles—two for four-cane Kniffin system.

wood too severely. It is a very common practice to cut the canes back to two buds each. This should not be done, as the stronger buds are usually some distance farther on the cane. Keen in mind that the fruiting shoots are borne on the one-year-old wood and that a vine can produce only a limited amount of good fruit. On a large vigorous vine we may want to leave from sixty to eighty buds, while on a weaker vine forty may be sufficient. Decide upon the vigor of the vine and then pick out four to eight good canes and cut each of these back to eight to twelve buds. Try to select the canes back as near the base of other canes and the old wood. Do not neglect the pruning for a single year. Spraying the Vineyard

Each year many grapes are lost by rotting on the vines. This trouble is usually due to the disease known as black rot. It is a mistake to try to curt this trouble by plucking leaves Every part of the plant should be thoroughly covered with the spray at each application.

Varieties for the Home The proper selction of varieties is verv important both for home use and commercial purposes. Several varieties ripening at different dates should be chosen for home planting.

Worden is a very good quality grape, of large size both in cluster and berry, the fruit is black in color with a blue bloom. This variety is not suited to shinning or rough hand-ling, as it cracks hadly. Worden ripens a week to ten days earlier than Concord.

POULTRY

SPECIAL BREEDING PENS

The foundation of most of the advancement that is made in poultry breeding is through the use of selective breeding. Little progress can be made unless some definite plan of breeding is followed. Some improvement can be made through flock seseveral will spring out from along lection, but the improvement is more the upright cane. From this time on pruning each year consists of choosing two canes for each of the wires and cutting the canes to twelve buds each on the upper wire and to eight buds each on the lower wire. Always select the stronger canes and those originating nearest to the upright stem. If the vine appears to be weak, leave less buds. and if, on the other hand, it is tive, while it would probably be out with the hens. Alternating the males in this fashion will prevent fighting

There are no secrets about breeding fowls for increased egg production. The best method of securing improvement is to practice selection of the breeding stock and use males of known ancestry. Chickens must have the proper breeding to lay large numbers of eggs.

INCUBATORS BEAT HENS There are still some people who believe that hatching chicks with hens is superior to hatching with incubators. As a rule such people remember the hen which hatched 15 chicks out of the vine as possible so as to avoid a 15 eggs, but they forgot those that long, bare trunk. Remove all the left the nest, broke the eggs, infected 15 eggs, but they forgot those that the young chickens with lice and mites and introduced other parasites and diseases that caused heavy losses later. Any person who wants to make a thorough test should try hatching out 200 chicks by both means. We would suggest that they be fair to both of their time as well as of the results.

Artificial incubation and brooding re not only the big time savers of the chick business, but they also permit the young chickens to be hatched and reared on fresh ground away from old birds and under sanitary conditions to be hatched early in the spring, before good layers became broody, and in this way they make it possible to raise chicks that mature for fall and early winter layers. In order for incubators to beat hens they must be run according to direction. Nature helps hens to give eggs proper attention. The incubator operator must imitate nature. When a good machine is purchased the owner need not fear to hatch his best eggs in it, if he will run it according to direc-

BROODER HOUSES SAVE TIME AND MONEY

One of the most important reasons for adopting brooder houses as part of time as Concord.

Producing chicks by artificial means of brooding Brighton is a dark red variety of eliminates many of these diseases and parasites as the chicks will not be forced to live on ground that is contaminated, nor need they associate with mature birds that may carry parasites or diseases to them.

One of the limiting factors that has discouraged many people from building brooder houses is the fact that it is hard to save enough eggs from good breeders to fill a brooder house at one time. Nowadays this situation can be met by purchasing all or a portion of the chicks from a hatchery.

There are many practical advantages in having a flock that is uniform An industrial foundation fund to in size. Such a flock will grow betnable the board of commerce of ter and will result in better matured

The options take in holdings of the John R. Robertson Co., the Fruitvale Resort Co., George T. Jennings and William B. Lidke. The property is being pooled. It is proposed to place the deeds in escrow with a Muskegon trust company until club memberships have been subscribed and paid for.

Officers of the club are: President, A. J. Rankin of Hart; treasurer, Walter Churchill; secretary, William B.

Dr. Serves as Health Officer For 50 Years

Dr. E. G. Folsom, health officer of Mt. Clemens, Mich., recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his graduation from Chicago Homeopathic college. Dr. Folsom has been health officer of Mt. Clemens for 35 years, and also served a four-year term as postmaster. He has held several other public offices, including secretary of the Macomb county pension board and examining physician for the Macomb county draft board during the World war.

He was born in 1854 in Attica, N. Y., and was educated at the Temple Hill academy in Genesee, N. Y., later going to Chicago Homeopathic college, from which he graduated as a doctor of medicine in 1877. He came to Mt. Clemens in 1884 and has resided and practiced here ever since. It was his knowledge of contagious diseases which prompted city officials to make him health officer. And it was Dr. Folsom's willingness to serve his city that prompted him to accept the position and continue it often with financial loss to himself.

North decided in circuit court in giving heirs of Charles Willard, pioneer, permission to dispose of his 180-acre property on east Columbia avenue, Battle Creek, despite the fact that Willard's will provided it could not be sold until the first generation of heirs had died.

Willard Brewer, given a life-long ease of the farm in the will, had pe titioned for permission to dispose of the property.

Testimony showed that $5,000 wa lost in operating the farm a year.

Californian, Money Made in Manistee, Gives Schools $3,200

A gift of $3,200 to the Manistee public schools with which to purchase manual training and domestic science laboratory equipment was made by Mrs. Robert R. Blacker of Pasadena Cal., wife of a former millionaire whose money was made in lumber and timber business in this county.

Mrs. Blacker gave $3,000 to start the vocational department of Manis tee 15 years ago, when there were only a handful of students. Now 680 boys and girls use the equipment she supplied and that purchased since by the board of education.

LEELANAU PREPARES FOR BIG SEASON

"Standing room only will be the ule this summer at Leelanau county esorts if present inquiries mean anything," according to Alfred Meafoy, proprietor of Fountain Point Inn. The season's going to be a big one!"

Fountain Point is a resort patronized heavily by residents of Cincinnati and southern Ohio. It lies midway between the head and the foot of Lake Leelenau, and has the distinction of being the county's oldest summering place. The original hotel, built more than 35 years ago, still is in service as a wing of the modern structure of the inn. There are in addition some 80 cottages lining both shores of the ake here.

While conditions at Fountain Point indicate a boom there are no less encouraging at Leland, Northport and Sleeping Bear resorts. At Leland A. Brooks Wilder, president of Leland Country club, announced that the new clubhouse will be completed by the opening of the summer season. This will be one of the finest country club buildings in the north.

"We'll be open for business the middle of June," Frank Rossman, proprietor of the Nicholas hotel at Leland, said. His hostelry was burned to the ground late last fall and only the foundation of the new building was completed before snow halted operations.

Rossman continued: "I've a big gang of men ready to start work the minute the weather permits. Indications point to Leland's biggest

Potato Train

The potato train here Saturday proved a big winner in every respect, there were more exhibitors han at any previous stop, and the attendance was all that could be desired.

The supply of certified seed allotted to this section was exhausted and more could have been sold, proving that our potato growers are determined to put this section back on the map as producers the best potatoes.

E. C. Briggs won first prize; Yunker & Son, second; S. B. Frisbie, third and Ed Youderian, fourth, and all were well repaid for their trouble. We were unable to find who won fifth and sixth places. Farmers who attended the meet assure us that they learned much to their advantage and while they cannot put all into practice they are determined to work toward the ends to be desired. We believe this was the most beneficial meetng from the standpoint of the potato grower that this section ever had and we congratulate all concerned in the marked success of the Woman's Fortnightly Club C. Death Never Idle

The world's estimated death rate is one every second. It is even faster than that, for 68 deaths occur every minute, 97.000 a day, and 05.740,800 a year. At the same time, never before during recorded history, has the world contained so many people. But, in every civilized country families grow smaller. The world never has been overpopulated so far as we know. Nature probably will see to it that it

CHAMPION ORATOR ALSO AN ATHLETE.

Winner in the men's contest at the state intercollegiate oratorical meet at Olivet college was Albion college representative, not only an orator but a World war soldier and capable athlete. When James Cretcher of Warsaw, Ind., once one of the boys at the great Moose home at Mooseheart, Ill., took the platform against eight other college representatives to speak on "The Valley of Dry Bones" he talked on conclusions forged out of a white heat experience as a machine gunner with Canadian expeditionary forces in France. Cretcher enlisted as a boy of 15 and was in several major offensives. Cretcher, a six-footer, is as good an athlete as he is an orator. His experiences on Mooseheart teams gave him a good background for his positions on Albion college squads. He was a member of the football team for two seasons until injuries and necessity for making his own way through school made him give up the football game. He has been a weight man on the track team during his entire course of four years and has few equals in the M. I. A. A.

He will be superintendent o schools next year at Gagetown.

Cretcher, who won the Michigan oratorical contest by getting first from every one of the seven judges, on April1 will go to the college in West Virginia that wins that state's contest to compete in the divisional contest.

Rader Will Spend $100,000 on W. W. C. C. Resort at Muskegon

Plans have been practically completed for the expenditure of $100,-000 for improvements at the Lake Harbor summer conference grounds owned by the World Wide Christian Couriers, it was announced by President Paul Rader.

Included in the proposed improvements are $35,000 for the construction of an 18-hole golf course and $50,000 for new sidewalks and roads, electric lights, water supply and construction of cottages. This work will be done by a Chicago real estate company, to whom the grounds will be leased. The remainder of the money will be spent by the W. W. C. C. for improvements to their present build-

Mr. Rader will personally supervise all the work. Chief among the organization's improvements are the completion of the open air tabernacle in the dunes and enlargement of the cafeteria and children's dormitories.

It is planned to hold the formal opening of the new conference grounds June 1.

Teacher's Dogs Cost Her Job

"Love me, love my dog," is the ultimatum of Miss Jessie E. Waldon, of Dundee, Mich., who, it is said, refused to leave her school in district No. 7. Groveland township, after the board, outraged by her insistence to be permitted to keep a dog and a litter of pupples in the school, had dis charged her. Miss Waldon was engaged last summer, taking up her duties August 30. It was in December that she brought the puppies to school, it is declared. When the board objected, she removed them. Finding them back in the building last week, the board dismissed the teacher, but, it is claimed she refused to be fired.

POEMS | LOVE & COM

By Charles Hanson Towne

"A Strange Story," by Elinor Wylie Elinor Wylie (now Mrs. William Rose Benet) is one of the few poets living who have vivid imagination Too many of our versifiers have a del icate fancy-and nothing more. There is a vast space between the two. Ir a poem like this the author seems to me to rise to the highest plane of artistic expression. She tells not only one life story, but several, in the small compass of six stanzas. It is a thrilling effect which she achieves.

When I died in Berners Street I remember well That I had lights at head and feet, and passing bell.

But when I died in Houndsditch They would not lay me out, Because they said I was a witch; The rats ran about.

When I died in Holborn In an old house and tall, I know the tapestry was torn And hanging from the wall.

When I died in Marlybone, I was saying my prayers; There I died all alone Up four flights of stairs.

But when I died near Lincoln's Inn. The small gold I had Surrounded me with kith and kin; I died stark mad.

When I died in Bloomsbury In the bend of your arm, At the end I died merry And comforted and warm. (Copyright, 1927)

San Francisco.-Around the world 32 times, only fifteen times on the beaten path; all places of interest and many seldom heard of, in all parts of the globe visited; traveling alone, seeing things never before witnessed by white women, going to places never before entered by women and alone.

Such are some of the experiences of Miss Celeste J. Miller of Chicago, who boasts she is 81 and able to do the Charleston. She has sailed for Australia and New Zealand on her thirty-third world girdling trip, and is routed to cover more than 35,000 miles. Last year Miss Miller said she covered 50,000 miles, 10,000 being done in an auto.

"Why don't I settle down?" Miss Miller said when questioned. "I am still able to enjoy traveling and never intend to settle down until I'm utterly incapacitated.

My father left me enough money to live and travel. I save nothing. I just enjoy myself and have spent my whole life traveling-always alone. But the tough part of the whole thing is that there is no place to go. Nobody can suggest any place of interest that I haven't already visited."

Miss Miller is proud of the fact that she does not look nor feel he 81 years. She is also proud of the fact that her skin is smooth, her tresses bobbed, her teeth sound and natural throughout. SUGGESTIONS

For the Corners Soak one of the wooden meat skewers that come in roasts in water before starting to scrub the baseboard of the kitchen. It is invaluable when you come to the corners, as after digging it forms a stig little brush on the end that fairly pries out the dirt.

Witchcraft Has Part in Grand Rapids Suit

That the old superstition of witchcraft is still existant in some sections was disclosed in Circuit Judge M. L. The woman said that as she was returning home from church on October 3, last, she was accosted by Czachanski, who, accusing her of having cast a spell over his wife, who was ill, knocked her down and severely beat her.

AUTOCRACY VS. PARTNERSHIP?

It would be interesting to know what our young men and womenespecially men-think about this man and woman question. Whether they consider women have gone too far astray in their efforts to assert themselves, and a return to old-fashioned ways would improve matters. Or whether they prefer the newer way of absolute equality of the sexes in the home, business and politics and believe that it will, in time, bring about the ideal marriage.

The following letter will show that there is at least one young man who believes in the old way and thinks a return to it would be beneficial.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: You have written a good deal in your column about men and women going 'fifty-fifty' and 'playing fair' when they are married. Of course I believe in that, but, Mrs. Lee, don't you think that the man really should be the head of the house? A man is out in the world more than a woman and is in a position to judge what is best to be done in many cases, and the home needs a head as much as an army or a busi-

"And another thing, Mrs. Lee. Do you approve of the Lucy Stoners? Shouldn't a woman take the name of a man she marries and be known by it? It saves confusion if nothing more and I, for one, think women were much better off when they stayed at home and kept house instead of gowhose simple, surplice-like bathing ing into business and politics and what not. Yes, I'll go further and admit I believe they should obey, their husbands—at times anyhow.

"Old-Fashioned Joe."

The way I look at it, Joe, a marriage is a partnership—not an army or one-man business. Two people supposedly evenly matched in intelligence-put in all they have and form a partnership. Now in such an arrangement the two are equal, are they not? They should consult with one another and decide on a policy in all important matters. In some the man would naturally know more than the woman, and in others she would be best informed.

The Lucy Stoners do confuse one a bit, don't they? But if you had worked hard to build a name for yourself or even if you had not-you'd be attached to your own name, wouldn't you, and hate to sink your identity in that of another. That is the way many women feel.

And as to your last statement, women will never go back to the old ways entirely, although they modify their present ways to a certain extent. So you'll have to accept the fact and make the best of it.

WITH WOMEN of TODAY

A unique residence for business women (Devon Hall) has been opened in Cleveland, O. It is in no sense a working girls' club, but an up-to-date hotel for business women, where rooms may be obtained at the price they would pay in a rooming house. Miss Marzita Savord is the manager and her staff is made up entirely of women. A committee of 20 representative business and professional women act in an advisory capacity.

Devon Hall is the consummation of a dream of W. L. Ulmer of Cleveland, but he lays no claim to being a philanthropist. The hotel is run on strict business principles. The location is ideal, overlooking a park. It is hailed as the first step in solving the housing problem of the business girl in our large cities.

Two large parlors, library with radio and orthophonic victrola, four small parlors for individual entertaining of guests and a cafeteria occupy the lower floor. Five floors are occupied by bedrooms with central lavatory on each floor, nine baths and twelve showers, individual dressing tables and lockers for toilet articles. There is also a small laundry and ironing room on each floor. No two bedrooms are furnished exactly alike. The hotel accommodates 450 women. Queen's Hobby

However, I had promised them if ever I should come to Dijon to put up at the "Cloche d'Or"—which, it seems, for the European connoisseur of the table, is as sacred as Mecca.

Arriving at the hotel, I was show casually to a double-bedded room and subsequently ushered with hushed and expectant ceremony to the dinner table. There I was waited upon with the deference due to a traveler who has expressed a desire to dine well and to be guided correctly in his choice of I put myself in the hands of the maitre d'hotel, who, menu in hand, discoursed expressively of the dishes which he suggested and the wines which alone were worthy to accompany them.

I had arrived at an early hour, for I had started my day at cock-crow to enjoy the freshness of the morning, and I intended to catch the train which passed through Dijon at about I was, therefore, proposing to retire to my room immediately after dinner in order to get some four or five hours' sleep before the train arrived.

My plan, however, was not to be so easily fulfilled. I had finished dining—it was, I think, about eight o'clock -and was taking coffee when there appeared at the door a stranger who, after looking carefully around the room, advanced slowly in my rection. I thought he was intending to take a table next to mine, which was disengaged, and I did not remark him particularly, except to note that he was a small, unobtrusive kind of a man, wearing a rather shabby overcoat with a velvet collar.

Suddenly, however, he came to a stand beside me, and the next moment found I was being greeted by a fel-

"Pardon me," he said, "but you are

I replied that I was indeed an American, but forbore to add that I had passed the last ten years or more in Paris. He seemed relieved to find that I was indeed a compatriot.

"In that case," he said, "I hope you may be willing to render me a service which I should highly appreciate."

I said I should be delighted, and he went on to explain. It seemed that I had just engaged the last available room in the hotel. As it was a double room, he would venture to ask whether I would share it with him.

I warned him that I should be rising in the middle of the night to catch the Geneva express, a proceeding which could hardly fail to disturb his rest. He brushed this aside, however, saying that he, too, would probably be catching the same train.

I am never sorry to have a chance of mixing with a fellow countryman. I am from the south-"the land of cotton, cinnamon trees and sandy bot-tom"—and my grandfather served under Lee till he fell at Gettysburg facts of which I continued to be proud. Since the age of twenty-one, however, when I entered the American and Overseas Bank, my work has kept me continuously abroad, and my only contact with my native soil has been the chance travelers from the States who help me to be vicariously

I accordingly assented to the stranger's proposal, inviting him at the same time to order his dinner at my table if he happened to be in need of company.

He sat down at once, ordering, to the disgust of the maitre d'hotel, a plate of eggs and bacon, with strong

He was sociable enough, quite voluble in fact, and very deft and quick in his movements. He informed me that he was a schoolmaster in some small township of the middle west, the name of which I have forgotten, and that, having lately acquired a traveling scholarship from a university in California, he was touring Europe in the hope of attaining what was evi-

The fat man chose a table some five yards away from ours, and I was able to notice other details. A diamond tie pin and a thick diamond and sap-phire ring on his little finger imparted the last touch of vulgarity to his outfit, and a cast in one eye gave an oddly vacant expression to his face, completing the effect of stupid cunning which he instantly conveyed.

I looked next at his companion. She struck me at first sight as plain and not at all remarkable. She wore a dark traveling dress and a small closeme rather of a hound suddenly aware of strange footsteps.

I slightly altered my position and looked toward the door. An ungracefully fat man, who even from a distance was remarkably ugly and dressed in clothes only the flashiest of Paris tailors could achieve, was handing a lady's wraps to a chauffeur in uniform.

Was exactly know that in a few moments I was definitely asking myself how she could possibly be associated with the man beside her, and that in less time than it takes to record these facts I had quite forgotten my prefiminary impression that she was pain. You would run away from me, would you? Well, I'll show you! The first thing we do in New York tomorrow will be to find a parson and tie you tight!"

"But Clif thinks we're still engaged. He's coming to see me to-morrow night."

"Oh, sure," Brazenose agreed, with a grin only less boyish than his son's.

"And the one who's sure to get squeezed." The little bear's face "We can't be married very soon, Peter, because if we are father's sure to spot you instantly, and he'll take it out on dad—who has rouble enough with him now.'

"Don't let that stand in your way, my dear." The elder man kissed her hand, bringing a brighter color to her face. "We're considering life now, not property."

The LOGICAL TIME

to clean up your poultry house and dairy barn is now. With the coming of mild weather germs and vermin will multiply with amazing rapidity. A liberal application of disinfectant and lime will insure sanitary quarters for your live stock. We have one of the best disinfectants on the market and plenty of high grade lime. A general clean up will pay on money and satisfaction.

Why Take a Chance?

of catching cold when we have plenty of coal in lump and range sizes on hand? This is the kind you found so satisfactory this winter. Just right for this mild weather as you can check your fire without filling your pipe and chimney with soot.

Also Chick Feeds; Poultry and Dairy Feeds, Building Supplies and Grape Twine on hand.
