PORT AUSTIN PAVILION PADLOCKED

A federal padlock has been placed on the Lakeside Inn dancing pavilion of Port Austin by the order of Judge Arthur Tuttle. The hotel, which was padlocked for a short time, will remain open.

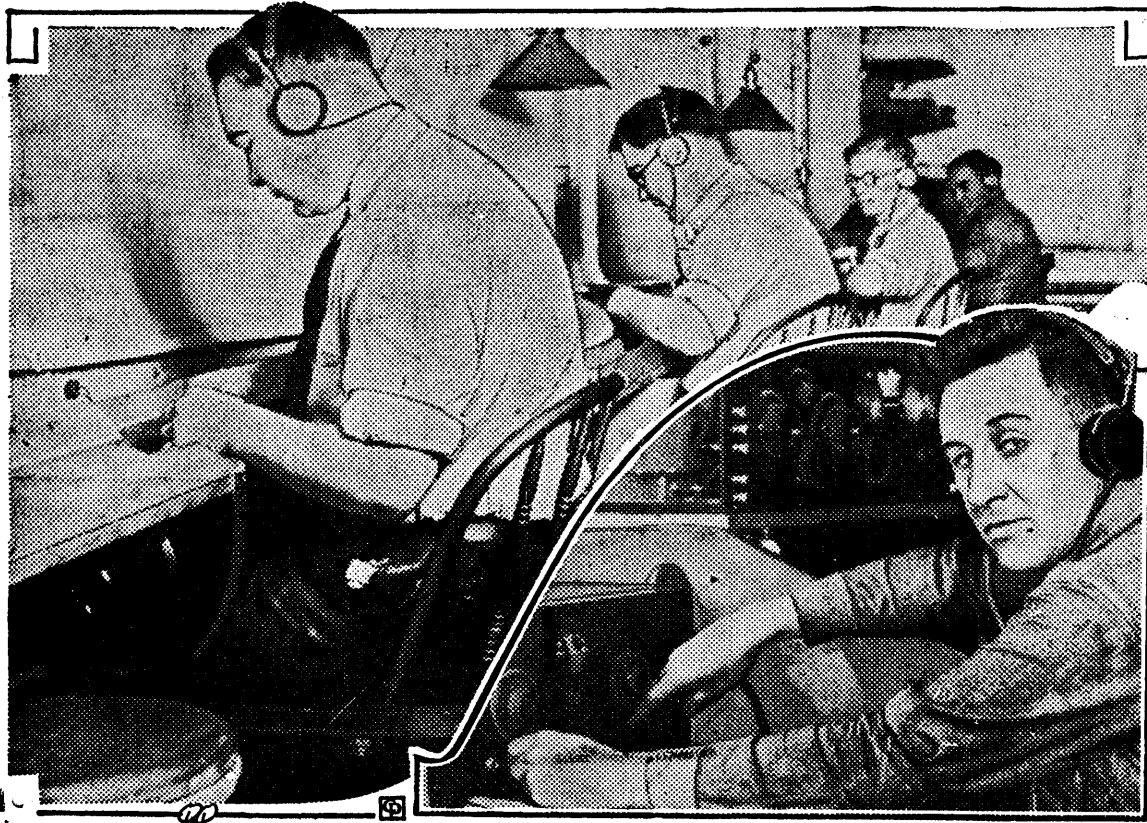

The padlock order was signed by Judge Tuttle following several liquor raids on the hotel when the property was owned by Mrs. Minnie Stinson. Mrs. Stinson was sentenced to serve a prison term for violation of the prohibition law.

The property was recently purchased by Max Pearlman of Detroit, who is now operating the hotel.

The release of the padlock on the hotel was secured by Mr. Pearlman and the co-operation of the Exchange club.

The pavilion, which is one of the largest and finest in the state, was built two years ago at a cost of $30,000.

Radio Entertainment Provided for Factory Help

Throughout each working day in the small factory operated by F. Percy and H. W. Collingwood, brothers, at Attleboro, Mass., employees enjoy radio entertainment. At every worker's bench is a plug into which he can slip the tips of his headphone cord. The brothers believe that theirs is the only radioized factory in the world and they believe that they get increased production from employees. Photo shows workers with their headphones, and, inset, F. Percy Collingwood.

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby —Babies Have Nerves—

By RUTH BRITAIN

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

500 GOLFERS IN MT. CLEMENS

Between 400 and 500 residents of Mt. Clemens are enthusiastic golfers, in the opinion of Fred Shoemaker, one of the owners of Hillcrest Golf club, which is enlarging its course from nine to 18 holes this season. The interest in golf in the Detroit metropolitan area has increased 50 per cent in the past year or so, he says, and this increase is due largely to the development of more public courses.

In accordance with the custom instituted last year, there will be two tournaments held at Hillcrest later this summer. Prizes will be awarded to the winners.

Hudson's Motor Reduces Profit Per Car to $45

Hudson Motor Car Company's profit per car in the first quarter of 1928 are shown to be $45, as compared with $54 in the first quarter of 1927, in the company's recent statement. This declining margin of profit is said to be due to keen competition in the low-priced six-cylinder field and was caused in part by a reduction in prices on the Essex models, announced early this year.

Output during the first quarter showed a large gain as compared with the corresponding period a year ago. The total of 91,500 units which were produced established a new high record, comparing with 74,000 in the initial quarter of 1927 and showing a gain of 24 per cent.

In the first quarter of 1928 Hudson reported net profits of $4,207,373, equal to $2.63 a share on the 1,596,660 shares of stock. Compared with initial quarter of 1927, when profits were $4,026,515, this year's report showed a gain in net of only $180,858 or 4.4 per cent. Last year's profits were equal to $2.52 a share on the stock.

In 1927 Hudson earned $9.04 a share on its stock, of which 27 per cent was earned in the first three months. If earnings for the current year develop along the same lines, the increase shown for the first quarter profits, as compared with profits a year ago, would indicate net for the year of nearly $10 a share on the stock.

For some years Hudson has operated on an extremely narrow margin of profit a unit. Its output has shown steady expansion. In 1927 production established a new high record at 280,000 units. Profits were considerably below the former record due to the decline in margin of profit. With total profits of $14,431,256 in 1927, the margin of profit was equal to around $51 a car produced. In the company's most profitable year, 1925, earnings were $21,379,000 on an output of 264,000 vehicles. The margin of profit that year was more than $80 a unit. During the 1926 period of readjustment in Hudson's affairs the company produced 245,000 units and reported profit of only $5,373,000, or less than $22 a unit.

Holland Soon to Have Its Airport

Holland will become an airport city within a few weeks. The infield on the Holland fair grounds has been picked as the landing field. This action was taken by the council in view of the fact that Holland is rapidly becoming connected with the air industry.

The new field will be leveled and placed in excellent condition. Hangars will be built by the O. E. Szekely corporation, air signs will be erected and a system of lights installed for night service.

Plan Speedway-Airport

Articles have been filed at Lansing for a $750,000 corporation to be known as the Flint Super Speedway-Airport to construct a speedway where automobile races can be held under A. A. A. sanction. Officers of the new firm are: Edwin S. Lunt, president; Otto P. Graff, vice president; and Charles L. Lippincott, secretary-treasurer. George Long, builder of the Altoona race track, has been engaged to supervise the construction of the track which is expected to be started by June 15.

Options are held on two sites, one in Lapeer road at the boundary of Flint, and the other in Mt. Morris, eight miles from Flint. Present plans call for the building of a two-mile concrete oval, flat on the straight-aways and banked sufficiently on the curves to permit a speed of 150 miles per hour.

Hundreds of postal clerks are expected in Alma for the convention from the largest to the smallest offices in Michigan.

Find Salt Enough to Last Million Years At Manistee

Salt deposits big enough to supply the entire country with salt for a million years has been found beneath the salt strata from which local manufacturers have been drawing for 50 years Ruggles & Rademaker has announced.

The company is putting down a test well to a 5,000-foot depth to determine the geology of this region. This well has already passed through more than 600 feet of rock salt of unusual purity. Rademaker says the stratum in which the Manistee wells have terminated in the past is 2,000 feet beneath the surface. Several strata are found below this.

Start $750,000 Addition To Durant Plant

Footings have been laid for the $750,000 addition to the Lansing Durant plant and work is progressing rapidly on the structure, according to officials of the H. G. Christman Lansing Company, which has the general contract. Excavation is virtually complete and the Michigan Central railroad has begun laying a switch from its tracks westward to the new factory section. About 100 men are employed in the construction operations. The plant is to be used for building Durant bodies.

Show Lake Levels Are Still Rising

Lake levels are coming back and with the rising water is a new boom in shore property. Beaches that were exposed to the hot sun last summer are now covered by 18 inches of water.

Along Saginaw Bay at Port Austin the water has risen three feet in the last two years, about half of that amount being noticeable this spring. Rocks that protruded last year are now covered with water and the former beauty of the shore line is being restored.

About three years ago the shore line suffered from the low tide of a 10-year cycle of lowering and rising levels. The low waters were blamed to the Chicago drainage canal and the continual dredging of the St. Clair river by sand boats.

Old time residents were consulted who recalled that in 1890 the lakes were lower than in 1925. This set the shore property owners to work to uncover the facts. Dr. A. W. Hogan of Bad Axe, who has a summer home at Broken Rocks, secured charts of the government survey showing that there has been a rising and lowering of water levels over a 10-year cycle as well as the usual changes during each season.

The present rising of the water indicates that the former level may fully return, at least it encourages property owners to believe that a reasonable permanency in the shore line is assured.

Confidence thus gained boosted shore property sales last year and will probably increase the interest this season.

Leslie Watt, Sr., of this village, who has kept tab on the water for years, states that at one time the water was four feet higher than at present. He is authority for the statement that the levels have risen 18 inches since last summer and three feet since 1926.

Acid Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"
Better than Soda

Hereafter, instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

RULES INDIANS ARE WITHOUT SPECIAL PRIVILEGES

Attorney General Wilbur M. Brucker has ruled that no Indian residing in Michigan has any special hunting and fishing privilege over those possessed by any other citizen.

Some time ago Poh Tah Sunk, a Chippewa Indian residing near Alma, raised the question with the state department of conservation and he was informed that Indians are in the same status as any other citizen. Now Mr. Sunk has raised the question with the attorney general for a formal ruling, contending that old treaties entered into by his forefathers with the federal government gave the Indians perpetual hunting and fishing rights.

Brucker has gone back into the musty files and dug up the treaties entered into by the government with the Saginaw, Swan Creek and Black River bands of the Chippewa tribe. Now he rules that the hunting and fishing rights held only so long as title to the land remained with the federal government, and also that when the constitution of 1855 conferred upon Michigan Indians the right of citizenship it placed them in the same classification as all other persons.

Gives Gotham Spending Lesson

While New Yorkers are supposed to know all there is to know about the art of spending money, Alfred Lowenstein, Belgian financier and reputed one of the ten richest men in the world, has been giving the metropolis a few lessons. Lowenstein, accompanied by his personal aviator, four secretaries, two typists, a chauffeur, a detective, and his family, has been staying in the royal suite at the Hotel Ambassador, New York City, where his hotel bill alone is said to average more than $1,000 a day. Photos above show views of the suite occupied by Lowenstein, inset, and his entourage. Night clubs, theater agencies and florist shops have also been feeling his Midas touch.

MICHIGAN LEADS IN CALF SKIN OUTPUT

Michigan ranks near the top in the production of calf skins, the so-called "aristocrat" among the leather-producing pelts, according to Edward A. Brand, secretary of the Calf Tanners' Association.

Fully 80 per cent of the calf skins comes from the dairy industry in states east of the Mississippi river, he said. The predominating sources are New York, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin.

More than 80 per cent of the cattle hides comes from points west of the Mississippi river, notably in the west central and mountain sections.

"Leather is a commodity most essential to the people of the United States, yet very little is said about it," said Mr. Brand. "Who knows that the pelts of 125,000,000 animals are used to make the 350,000,000 pairs of shoes sold annually in the United States?"

"About 17,000,000 calf skins are consumed in the United States each year in the production of the dress shoes for both men and women. The best skins come from animals fed on milk, fattened, well matured and developed. Under these conditions the skin is properly nourished, develops a fine grain and becomes plump and supple. It is the kind of skin that the tanner seeks because it makes the most enduring leather, is both strong and flexible, takes a fine finish and gives the best service in shoes."

"Of the 17,000,000 calf skins consumed 9,500,000 are produced in the United States, the remainder being imported. The domestic supply, if all considered of first grade skins, would be adequate for the production of uppers for nearly 50,000,000 pairs of shoes. But the calf tanners find that a large part of these skins is damaged by scratches, cuts and faulty curing before they reach the tannery. A nationwide campaign has been started to reduce the loss as much as possible."

"The imported skins consist in the main of lightweight pelts from European countries used primarily for the production of women's shoes. A large part of the domestic skins is heavier and most suitable for men's fine shoes."

All-Season Young Onions

May planted onion seed will be the main dependence for young onions after the early crop from sets is exhausted and successive plantings may be made at two week intervals until into June to continue the crop after the season of selling sets is over. Old-fashioned gardeners always soak their onion seed over night or even longer before planting it, and this is a good idea to hasten germination.

Onions from seed need much more attention than onions from sets. The set will produce an edible young onion in almost any sort of soil, for it will take considerable of its nourishment from the parent bulb while it is getting a start. The young onion from seed must take all its nourishment from the soil, and good onion soil is the best soil that can be provided.

It should be rich and well worked, but onions do not want fresh manure. Sow the seed thinly in rows six inches apart in the small garden to be worked by hand and a foot apart where the hoe is to be plied. Onion seed gives a high percentage of germination and if sown thickly it will come up thickly and make work, for the young onions should be thinned so that each one will stand alone and not in clusters, as they usually come up from thick sown seed. Thin to an inch apart as soon as they are large enough to handle.

They may stand this way if they are grown for young onions. If it is desired to raise a few mature bulbs leave a plant standing every four or six inches, eating the thinnings as young onions. Big onions cannot be expected from these later plantings, but small onions for pickling may be raised readily in this manner.

Keep them cultivated and weeded thoroughly. A light dressing of nitrate of soda will speed up the growth and add to the tenderness. This should be watered in immediately after application and should not be closer than an inch to the stem of each onion. It should be applied after they have made three or four leaves.

The bride was very much disconcerted at seeing twin beds in their bridal suite. "What's the matter, dearest?" asked the attentive bridegroom. "Why I certainly thought that we were going to get a room all to ourselves."

To Get Rid of Rats—Organize

When rats are known to hide and nest in large numbers in piles of lumber, sacked grain, hay or straw stacks, corn shocks, trash piles, and the like, an excellent means of destroying them is to inclose such places with a portable ratproof fence, throw out the straw, lumber or other material and kill the rats with clubs or by the aid of dogs. Rat hunts are often organized in rural communities, or rat-killing contests between rival teams, organizations, or communities are arranged, which result in large kills and furnish excellent sport to the participants.

Although the control of rats is largely an individual problem, rat infestation has a serious effect on the whole community, and organized effort is highly desirable. A man who allows rats to increase on his property until they menace the entire neighborhood, or a city dump which serves as an incubator for hordes of the pests, become matters of public concern.

The elimination of rats from a whole community can best be accomplished only by the organized effort of all the citizens. Organized anti-rat campaigns are increasing in popularity and are becoming the regular program not only in many municipalities and counties, but also in whole states. Such campaigns are of great value from economic, educational and sanitary standpoints. Assistance in planning, organizing and prosecuting organized anti-rat campaigns will gladly be given by the biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture, in the form of direct aid whenever practicable, by an expert for campaigns of large scope, or by furnishing plans, general instructions, publicity material and sample posters.

Alfalfa Fields May Need Care

Owners of alfalfa fields upon which part of the plants have been winter killed are advised by the farm crops department at Michigan State College not to plow down the alfalfa but to reseed the fields.

In cases where the plants are killed out in well defined areas, these spots should be thoroughly worked up with a spring tooth harrow and seed broadcast at the rate of eight to ten pounds to the acre.

On fields where the stand has not been killed out in spots, but where the stand has been thinned over the entire acreage, the spring tooth harrow should be used on the whole field and the seed broadcast as before.

Reseeding will not be successful on fields where June grass or quack grass has made a sod.

A heavy roller or a cultipacker should be used on the fields after the alfalfa seed has been sown. The packing of the soil will help cover the seed and will also assist in saving some plants that have been partially heaved from the soil during the winter.

Reseeding fields will pay in most cases where from one-half to two-thirds of the original stand is still alive. A fair crop of hay will be produced on these fields.

There is now a handy catch-all for under the kitchen sink, where scraps and parings can be dumped. It is a white enameled pail on a long swinging arm. Inside fits a metal pail that can be lifted out and cleaned.

COST OF SEED MAY LIMIT PRODUCTION

The high cost of seed is going to do more to hold the Michigan bean acreage in check than any other one factor, in the opinion of some members of the trade.

Farmers haven't the money to buy very much seed at $8 to $10 a bushel and with an over-production in prospect it is expected country banks will discourage growers from seeking loans with which to buy high priced seed. It is quite generally agreed among growers and jobbers that the acreage will be larger than last season, but the increase in Michigan will not be as great as in some western states where bean growing gained favor in recent years.

A Well Kept Poultry House

Part of the reason for success with poultry is good housing. A clean, neat, well ventilated and properly lighted poultry house is one of the biggest factors for success that is within the reach of every poultry raiser.

While many poultrymen and experiment stations are advocating the straw loft house, those who have the semimodern type can enjoy their share of success if lighting, warmth and ventilation are carefully watched.

Cleanliness and sanitation are as essential with this type of house as with any other and vice versa. Any laying house should have at least two thorough cleanings a year—one in the fall before the flock goes into winter quarters and one in the spring as soon as the flock is turned outdoors.

The Old Miser's Gift

By AD SCHUSTER

(Copyright.)

IT HAD never occurred to Elan Iarde that a miser could feel ashamed until Betty Combs, the girl in the room across the hall, left him a basket of food.

Elan had worked hard for his money, and did not intend to spend it recklessly. As the hoard grew he knew he could not give up a single cent over that which was necessary for the dingy room, simple food and the garments he bought at a second-hand store. He had nothing to love but his money—but he could remember a time when those he had loved had forsaken him. The money had been constant. It had grown under his care. It was beautiful and it stood for power.

This Betty Combs, who lived across the hall, could not afford to give him food. It was plain she was doing with too little herself. Elan heard her leave for work early in the morning and at night he knew she was washing clothes in her sink. She was making a brave fight, he could tell that, and now she was sharing her poverty with him. Elan surveyed himself in the glass and admitted he looked the part of a man in need.

"If the girl wants to give me food," he told himself, "there is no law to stop her." It would mean so much more each week to add to the savings. He would be growing richer so much the faster. He looked his door, counted his money, held it to his face, and told himself over and over that he was a man to be envied, that he was rich and no one knew it.

One day as the miser walked up the hall toward his room he saw Betty through her open doorway, sobbing with her head in her arms over a table. She was weeping too hard to notice his approach. Elan paused, started to walk on, then returned.

"Is there anything I can do for you?" he asked, adding quickly, "anything short of money? You know I'm a poor man, but I'm grateful for the food you have brought me, and—"

Betty lifted her head. "You can't help," she said dumbly, "but it is good of you to offer. I am weeping because I am silly, that's all; because I have had dreams of taking music lessons and it takes so long to earn enough. I'll be all right. I feel better for the crying spell."

Elan shifted from one foot to the other. Music lessons cost a lot of money. Anything that cost money was a dangerous subject.

"Just the same," he said, "it was good of you, needing the money, to send me food when I was hungry. I can't forget that."

The girl smiled through her tears. "It wasn't much and it helped to think I could do something for some one else."

Elan went into his room and closed the door. She was a queer girl, he thought, making presents when she needed every cent. He wondered how much it would cost to supply the lessons she seemed to want so badly. Elan reckoned up his fortune once more. He even thought of himself as an old man with but a few years to live. And she was young, just starting out. He didn't have money when he was young and yet he knew what it would have meant.

He counted his money yet again. Several times he arose and started for the door only to return and give the problem more thought. He had been a long time accumulating this money and it had meant hard work and privation. It was not right to give money away and yet this girl, thinking him poor, had divided her little store of food with him.

Suddenly the miser rose and rose with determined air, as if driving himself forward in fear of another change of heart, crossed the hall to the room of the girl. Betty responded to his knock.

"I've been thinking what you've done for me," said Elan with what for him was a strange embarrassment, "and I want to tell you I appreciate it."

For a moment, while he framed his offer, he stood in silence. Then he blurted out:

"You don't have to bring me any more food; I don't need it."

Aroused His Curiosity

Lamenting that people appear to know less and less about the plays of Shakespeare, Israel Zangwill used to tell this story:

Years ago, when Henry Irving was playing "Hamlet" at the Lyceum theater, London, Lord Randolph Churchill (father of Winston S. of that ilk) dropped into the theater one night to see the show.

"Randy," then at the height of his political glory, received an urgent summons calling him to the house of commons for a division. The performance was half over, so he rushed around to the stage door and sought Irving. Excitedly explaining what had happened, he added:

"It's too bad I cannot stay to the finish, but please do tell me how the play ends!"

Truthful

"That is the last straw—I give up."

"Many of you say that your wife and children are starving at home and I find you here having steak and mushrooms."

"But, sir, my wife and children really are starving at home."

No Written Constitution

England and France do not have written constitutions in the generally accepted sense of the term. The present government of Great Britain is based upon a series of acts and fundamental laws passed since the signing of Magna Charta. Parliament, however, is supreme and can make laws which do not agree with those acts often spoken of as "the British constitution." The government of France is based on several organic acts passed after the fall of Louis Napoleon. These acts do not constitute a written constitution in the sense of our constitution.—Exchange.

Inert Gases

Both nitrogen and helium are inert gases, without chemical action on other substances and they would probably remain indefinitely unchanged in sealed containers. Nitrogen may be obtained by removing oxygen from the air or by the decomposition of certain ammonium compounds. Helium is found in certain natural gases, from which it is obtained, or it may be separated from atmospheric nitrogen by passing it over heated magnesium, or from liquid air by means of fractional distillation.

Religion of Old Egypt

The ancient religious belief of the Egyptians was both monotheistic and polytheistic. There was one supreme god, Ra, represented by the sun, who had for his wife Mout, the mother of all nature. Osiris, who was the chief national Egyptian deity, was supposed to be the son of Seb, the earth, and Nut, the sky. There were many other lesser gods, but Ra was supreme.

Altered Fashion in Rings

It was Queen Victoria who "killed" the elaborate wedding ring for she insisted on a plain gold band for her marriage with Prince Albert. In that respect she was following a former Queen Mary who, for her marriage with Philip of Spain, informed her council that she desired to be married with a "plain hoop of gold."

Her Melon and Music Diet

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

ETHEL MANNERING was in that somewhat flattering but at times a bit troublesome position of having a few too many beaux on her string. During the last three months she had succeeded by dint of much thought in simmering them down to about two—the two being the interesting and esthetic Hillery de la Rue and the more rubicund and slightly more dominating rival, Tom Jones.

Ethel liked the two immensely but had been of late much inclined to accept the graceful attentions of Hillery.

When they were out at lunch Hillery always took her to some exquisitely decorated tea room where atmosphere abounded and the music would lure the soul far from the mundane things of earth. They would perhaps, at Hillery's suggestion, have a dainty lunch of leaf melon, a delicately blended salad and a cupful of coffee with perhaps a wisp of a wafer. Ethel had noticed that Hillery's sensitive and esthetic soul shriveled away in horror when a large and fragrant beefsteak smothered with onions was even so much as carried past their table.

As a matter of fact, Ethel sighed a bit wistfully as she watched a healthy couple at a table further on enjoying a very luscious looking stew.

However, the lovely music and Hillery's charming intellect made amends and Ethel began to feel that she was perhaps a bit mundane.

Tom Jones had been away for some three months and Hillery had been almost in full possession of the lovely Ethel. But upon Tom's arrival he straightway made an engagement with the girl he had long loved. Over the telephone he said to her:

"I've had a very satisfactory trip and want to celebrate. Come and have lunch, then we'll take a long spin up the Hudson. I have the afternoon free today."

"Oh, Tom, I'm having lunch with Hillery, but I could meet you at two o'clock—will that do?"

"Sure," said Tom. "But bring along a warm coat—it might be chilly coming back."

Ethel turned from the telephone with a smile. Tom was always so thoughtful. Hillery sometimes forgot there was such a thing as a chilly breeze. He liked seeing girls daintily clad and ethereal.

"What have you dragged that great coat along for," he asked upon catching sight of her at the doorway of the tea room.

Ethel blushed as if guilty of wanting to be warmly clothed.

"Well—Tom Jones has just returned and he wants me to go for a spin this afternoon—it might be chilly."

"Tom always thinks of the physical well being—if nothing else," Hillery said somewhat unpleasantly. "The kind of girl Tom should take to is the bovine, red-cheeked type—whose soul needs no beautiful music and who can join him in a good big Irish stew for lunch."

When they had finished their scant lunch and enjoyed an intellectual feast instead Ethel went off to meet Tom.

"Well, well, it's good to see you again, Ethel," laughed Tom, with his warm handshake thrilling right up Ethel's arm. "You look a bit thin, though. It takes me to keep you up to snuff and keep the roses in bloom in those pale cheeks. Better put your coat on—dear."

And before Ethel could protest Tom had pushed her into her coat and butoned up the neck.

Ethel was glad of the warmth. She had shivered a bit. "What's more, you're shivering. What have you had for lunch? Something substantial? If you've started off for a brisk afternoon with me on one of those melon and music lunches with a sardine or shrimp thrown in for good measure then, my girl, we'll just go have a regular lunch before we start."

He took her by the arm gently but firmly, put her in his car, and drove downtown to an old-fashioned restaurant that was not famous so much for its music and decorations as for its well-cooked steaks and chops.

Ethel was almost hysterical by this time, for there was no protesting when Tom was about. He ordered vegetable soup made with good stock, a couple of grilled chops and some baked onions, another vegetable or two and some apple pie.

An hour later Ethel and Tom emerged from the restaurant. There was a lovely flush on Ethel's cheeks and Tom's eyes gleamed at sight of it. He tucked her most comfortably into the car and Ethel gazed at him with eyes that had never looked in just that way at Hillery.

"How's that?" asked Tom, "Comfy?" "Beautiful!" said Ethel. "You're really a darling, Tom," she added. "I haven't been so comfy and happy and warm for three months."

"You see, dear," said Tom with a laugh as he swung the car into the maelstrom of Fifth avenue traffic with a hand that never wavered, "you need me to look after your well being. I don't mind how much melon and music you have so long as you have some food along with it."

"I rather think I can do without the melons," said Ethel softly, "so long as I have you."

WHERE BORER WILL BE FOUGHT THIS SPRING

The European corn borer quarantine for 1928 covers 32 entire counties and parts of five others. The shaded and darkened portions indicate the yearly spread of the corn borer and represent also the area which is required to be cleaned up prior to May 1, according to State regulations.

CLEAN UP THE BARNYARD!

All corn refuse about barns and feedlots must be disposed of to accomplish a 100 per cent clean-up. Unless corn refuse is completely covered with manure, corn borers are not killed, entomologists state. Raking and burning are recommended as the most practical means to get rid of corn refuse.

Long Career Spills

Learning for Senator

A prominent man in public life—a senator, it may be—said without fear of embarrassing him was the principal speaker at a recent banquet. More than that—he was the victim of one of those persons whose duty it is to speak as certain rather to the main attraction of the evening and who forgets himself in his own flow of oratory.

He went on and on and the reporters were getting restless and worried about making the final editions with the principal speaker's important talk. Finally, the senator handed a reporter a message: "How long can you men wait?" He was given the time and then asked in a message how long the gentleman speaking was going to hold the floor. He courteously replied: "for it can again be safely said that the curtain-raiser was also a member of the upper house of congress—that he thought he would speak only 20 minutes longer. Time went on and the speaker went on, and when it became apparent that he would go on for some time longer, the gentlemen of the press received another note from the important senator. It read: "All prophecies are withdrawn."—Philadelphia Record.

Joys of Exploration

Found in Adventure

One is often asked what is the attraction and what are the joys of polar exploration. The answer is—Adventure—going where man has never gone before. Achievement—discovering something of value to mankind such as the whale-fishery of South Georgia; or ramming your way through ice or any difficulties under steam or sail. The wonderful pure beauty of these regions . . . and last, but not least—comradeship—the comradeship of men. Men who fight alongside you, toil with you, laugh with you, and cheer you. . . . Pals who stand by each other through thick and thin; who share trials, hardships, joys, dangers and food, and are determined, at all hazards, to "see it through" together. For such men you feel a great affection, and the results are teamwork and loyalty of the finest, highest quality, with joy of memory that never fades away.—From "On

From the Frozen North," by Colman

and A. M. Mosk.

From the Beast

What do you think, as a reptile slithered along in its own Southern swamp. Yet over these wild creatures are being trapped and killed and used for leather shoes. The skin of a reptile's skin is used in many ways by means of secret mixtures I pass only to manufacturers. English and Dutch merchants first put on the market goods made from the skin of a water snake of Java and Sumatra. The women of Paris carry handbags made from the skin of the terrible python, and probably never think of it, though they would shrug their shoulders and tell you they were terrified of snakes. Even the fearful boa constrictor contributes its skin to the art of fashion.

At Morrow's End

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

MISS POLLY STICKLES was quite in despair about her niece Nancy. Nancy Weir was simply indifferent to all the handsome, dashing young men. Indeed Nancy was so distractingly pretty, with mischievous eyes, and soft dark hair with the trickiest wave in it, that Miss Polly often wondered how it happened that Nancy was not engaged right now.

"Dear Aunt Polly, they are all so bright and jolly and funny that they make me rather tired. Don't you know one rather dark, quiet man who soothes one by his very conversation?"

"Not one young man of that description," said Miss Polly rather blankly. "There is old Doctor Smith—you know him—fat and fifty if he is one day, and he is rather soothing, Nancy."

"Soothing sirupy!" sniffed Nancy. "You are impossible, Nancy child," and Miss Polly smiled.

"I am just as happy without anybody—only you ought to have one who will follow my description."

"Of course, there is Ralph Peterby, the author, but he would not look at you," remarked Miss Polly.

"You mean the man next door?"

"Nancy no—he lives at Morrow's End. His mother was one of the Morrow family."

"Then then, I might—meet him some day," and Nancy dimpled, her eyes dancing, daring behind the dreaminess.

The next day Nancy borrowed Miss Polly's golf cart and drove herself off toward the sea. She knew that a place called Morrow's End must be at the end of something! When she had gone a distance, she asked somebody the way to Morrow's End and found that she was on the right road. There were a few country estates out here but the road was rather lonely. When Nancy glimpsed the sea in the distance she thought that Morrow's End must be about the nicest place to live. She had had no thought of meeting the author Aunt Polly had spoken of, but just the coming out to this unusual place added a fillip to her dull days.

There was another car parked out there at Morrow's End—a rather new car, left with the engine running. Here, the high brick wall that surrounded the estate formed a beautiful curve and Nancy suddenly noticed that some bricks had been removed from the walls. She stood on the pile of bricks and peered over the wall.

What she saw made her grope for the small pistol she always carried.

A man was seated in a wicker chair under a tree, and before him on a small table was a pile of papers. Now he leaned back in the chair and lifted his hands high. Before him stood two ugly-looking men, both of whom held revolvers pointed directly at his head.

"Hand over your money, boss," said one roughly.

"I cannot very well with both hands in the air," said the tall, handsome, youngish man.

"Unloose one hand—put it down, see? Let us have that diamond."

The man slipped the ring from his little finger and laid it on the table. "It isn't a diamond—only a white topaz that belongs to my grandmother," he smiled quietly.

"Tell that to the marines," retorted the man sourly. "Now, money!" The hand searched his pockets and brought out money—not very much—a silver cigarette case.

"I've got a good mind to thump you good!" threatened the bandit, holding his gun by the barrel.

"I wouldn't do that!" said Nancy in her cool sweet voice. "You see I happen to have my pistol trained on you—and I am a dead shot, too!"

They turned and stared at her, and as they turned, Mr. Ralph Peterby blew shrilly on a police whistle attached to his key ring, and then promptly tripped up bandit number two while Nancy fired, shooting the button from the top of bandit number one's cap.

Just then half a dozen men came running—house servants, a couple of gardeners with rakes, and a smart-looking chauffeur. They carried off one bandit while the other fled to the hole in the wall and tried to wriggle through. But some of the men caught his feet and dragged him ignominiously backward. The butler had telephoned for the police and soon the captured men were on the way to jail. Nancy had returned to her car and was turning, preparatory to going home, when Mr. Ralph Peterby presented himself.

"Please don't go quite yet," he begged. "I am sure that you must be very much upset over this adventure."

"I am sorry," said Nancy rather weakly, "but I must go right back to my aunt's. I am glad that you are quite all right again, Mr. Peterby. Oh, I am Nancy Weir and I am visiting my aunt, Miss Polly Stickles."

"I have met her," said Mr. Peterby in such a pleasant tone that Aunt Polly would have been flattered. "I hope you will let me drive you home—my man can come for me after lunch if your Aunt Polly will give me some."

"I know she will be delighted," said Nancy, knowing that at last she was to be either happy ever after or always lonely.

And I am glad to say that Nancy was happy ever after with the master of Morrow's End.

Years of Service in Model T Fords

Expenditure of few dollars may enable you to get thousands of miles from your old car

THE Model T Ford is still a great car. It led the motor industry for twenty years and it is used today by more people than any other automobile. More than eight million Model T Fords are in active service in city, town and country, and many of them can be driven for two, three and five years and even longer at very small up-keep expense.

The cost of Model T parts and of necessary labor is unusually low because of established Ford policies.

New fenders, for instance, cost from $3.50 to $5 each, with a labor charge of $1 to $2.50. Tuning up the motor and replacing commutator case, brush and vibrator points costs only $1, with a small charge for material. Brake shoes can be installed and emergency brakes equalized for a labor charge of only $1.25. A labor charge of $4 to $5 will cover the overhauling of the front axle, rebushing springs and spring perches, and straightening, aligning and adjusting wheels.

The labor charge for overhauling the average rear axle runs from $5.75 to $7. Grinding valves and cleaning carbon can be done for $3 to $4.

A set of four new pistons costs only $7. For a labor charge of $20 to $25 you can have your motor and transmission completely overhauled. Parts are extra.

All of these prices are approximate, of course, because the cost of materials needed will depend on the condition of each car. They show, however, the low cost of putting the Model T Ford in shape for thousands of miles of additional service.

See the nearest Ford dealer, therefore, and have him estimate on the cost of re-conditioning your Model T Ford. He will tell you, in advance, exactly how much the complete job will cost.

Temperature of Moon

Since the moon has no atmosphere, radiation of the sun's heat is very rapid. Night on the moon is about 14 of our days long, and the daytime is of the same length. It is probable that the maximum in daytime is between freezing and boiling points. Very (astronomer) concludes; it is heated to a temperature of 200 degrees Fahrenheit. At night the temperature falls rapidly and may descend to 100 degrees below zero.

Technical Term

Oedipus complex is a term used in psychoanalysis that means that every one has buried in him tendencies that were once conscious in the human race, but have in a long process of cultural elimination become unconscious and unthinkable. The term comes from the mythical Greek Oedipus, who killed his father and married his mother.—Detroit News.

WEEK OF MAY 27

General Farm Outlook—The average trend of the temperature in Michigan for the week beginning May 27th will be above the seasonal average. There will be some precipitation and some cloudy skies, but rainfall is not expected to be overly plentiful and there will be enough sunshine to get in its good work. Conditions will be favorable for general growth as well as for planting of corn, sugar beets, potatoes, beans and truck crops.

Weather for the Week—The very early part of the week beginning May 27th in Michigan is expected to be warmer than seasonal. At this same time there will be strong storm activity. Heavy local rains, strong winds, as well as summer thunder storms and probable tornadoes in sections are all effects that one may expect at this time. By Tuesday or Wednesday thermal conditions will make a radical change for the colder. The change will be rather sharp in some sections and frosts may be expected in most any of the northern counties of the lower peninsula and as far south as Roscommon and Ogemaw counties. The balance of the month will be threatening and unsettled with the temperatures seasonal to a little below. As the week advances the temperatures are expected to get lower so that a rather hard freeze is expected in the northern half of the state near the end of the week, which will probably be during the opening days of June. The weather will be generally fair at the end of this week in the state.

June Weather—The month of June as a whole in most parts of Michigan will bring out a number of marked extremes. Of the two halves the first will be the drier of the two, while the latter will probably develop some of the more severe storms of the month. Electrical activity will be greater during first half.

Champion is the better spark plug because it has an exclusive sillimanite insulator specially treated to withstand the much higher temperatures of the modern high-compression engine. READ THIS FIRST

Bob Terry is released from prison after serving three years for a crime he did not commit. Naturally a light-hearted, ambitious young fellow, he is turned out of prison hardened and bitter with a "get even" complex. He is particularly bitter against Peter Borden, his former employer, who felt it his "duty" to send Bob to prison. Upon his release, Peter Borden meets Bob and urges him to live at his home. Borden is genuinely sorry for his mistake and wants to share his fortune with Bob. Lois Borden, Peter's beautiful daughter, whom Bob has always admired from afar, falls in love with Bob. Bob gets engaged to Kathleen Shannon, niece of his former prison pal. Kathleen works for John Carmody, the state's political boss, who also wants to get even with Peter Borden. Carmody is secretly in love with Kathleen and when he learns Bob is engaged to her he determines to entangle both Bob and Peter Borden in an embezzlement plot which will send them to prison. Lois Borden learns that Bob is in love with Kathleen Shannon and is curious to meet her. Kathleen and Todd Shannon, Bob's prison pal, are invited to call at the Borden home.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Thank you," Borden was courteous and apparently very much at ease. He addressed the girl standing somewhat timidly in the background. "And this is Miss Shannon?"

"Yes, sir." Borden bowed as they entered. Lois held back. Todd Shannon was just what she expected—a trifle more kindly of eye, perhaps—but she experienced a not unpleasant surprise at sight of Kathleen.

Kathleen was clad simply in a blue ensemble edged with the tiniest touch of silver ribbon. Her hat was a little thing of gray felt, tam-o'-shanter shape and set off by a bit of blue feather. The costume proclaimed taste and delicacy and Lois knew that she was looking at a woman who had more than beauty to recommend her.

Now Lois understood what Bruce Richardson had meant when he used the term "vivid" in describing Kathleen. She had fancied that he meant coarse and loud. Kathleen was anything but that. She radiated refinement along with poise and self-confidence, and Lois was surprised to find that she was sorry for the girl's obvious embarrassment at this moment of meeting.

Lois was human—and genuine. She came forward eagerly, both hands outstretched and a smile of real welcome on her lips.

"This is Lois Borden, Miss Shannon."

The girls met eye to eye. And from that instant each admired the other. Lois was friendly. Whatever unworthy ambition she might have had to shine in Bob Terry's eyes by contrast with a rather blatant woman of another world was forgotten absolutely.

"I'm awfully glad to meet you, Miss Borden. Bob has spoken of you so often."

A soft voice, and vibrant. A woman of power and striking femininity. They stood face to face, both beautiful—yet in marked contrast. Where Lois was slim and delicate and radiantly blonde, Kathleen was slightly heavier and black-eyed.

It was Bob who was most ill at ease. He had regretted his invitation and been prepared for an uncomfortable and combative evening—brief, unpleasant and awkward. Now, as Borden adroitly led them into the living room and assumed charge of the conversation, Bob felt out of the picture, as though he were the only spectator at a little drama which he could not understand.

His greatest surprise was Todd Shannon. Todd was slow and heavy, as usual, but he was not at all embarrassed. He met Borden's conversational advances more than halfway.

"I'm sorry you've never been here before, Mr. Shannon," vouchsafed Borden.

"Yes, sir." Again that slow, knowing grin twitched the corners of Todd's lips. "I ain't been out" so very long."

Bob saw Kathleen flush, and was grateful when Lois interjected a quick remark.

"But you must come often. We've tried to make Bob understand that we'd like his friends to be ours."

"That's real kind of you, miss. Of course me and Kathleen ain't used to such as this. Me, I'm liable to crash into something—you know."

Lois laughed. It was a genuine, infectious, friendly laugh, and Kathleen liked her for it. It would have been so easy for the calm blonde girl to have taken Todd's remark seriously. It put Kathleen at ease, and dispelled the last of her fears. For one thing, Todd was not at all abashed, and that phase of the evening had perturbed her considerably. Right now he was engrossed in conversation with Peter Borden.

CHAPTER XXVI

"I've been seen" this house ever since it was built, Mr. Borden. Never did seem like to me folks really lived in places like this. Kind of get a real kick out of visitin' one."

"You'll get used to it soon enough." "Gosh! Never to nothin' like this. But it's a great thing for Bob, here—ain't it, kid?" And he placed a big paw on Terry's knee.

"I'm not sure," Bob smiled shyly. "Sometimes I think I take it for granted—and then I find I'm wrong. I never was used to anything like it before."

The eyes of the two girls met. For a second they stared levelly, then both smiled. Here was a common bond which they recognized and welcomed. Each was amazed that she understood the other. They were surprised by the mutuality of their attraction. They were the two mothers of the one man, and as the three men immersed themselves in small talk, the girls drew together on the lounge.

The hum of deep masculine voices came to them—Borden directing the conversation and steering it away from the shoal waters; occasionally Todd Shannon's big laugh and Borden's small metallic one rang through the room. Bob was smiling. He was proud of Todd and Kathleen. He saw that the girls liked each other—but he did not hear Kathleen's frank question:

"We really want to talk about Bob, don't we, Miss Borden?"

Nor did he hear Lois's equally honest answer.

"Of course we do."

Save for an occasional reassuring glance in the direction of the three men, Lois devoted her entire attention to Kathleen. The bond between them had been instant and mutual. They were as far apart as the poles, but there was no difference in their straight glances which each reserved for the other, no difference in their honesty—and no difference in their interest in Boy Terry.

There was no hint of combativeness. Each girl recognized the sterling in the other and admired it. They accepted their common meeting ground, and each, in a second, completely altered her preconceived ideas. True, they both probed for hidden feelings, but their frank liking of each other made that a difficult task.

It was Lois who voiced the first question:

"Don't you think Bob has improved recently?"

"Tremendously. It's the work that has done it."

"The particular work he is doing?"

"No-o." Kathleen shook her head. "I can't say I think that. It is rather in his just having something to do—a job to go to every morning."

"You're right. He hasn't been easy to handle. I suppose you know him better than I do—the underlying man, that is. And if you do, you can readily enough visualize the way he has brooded around the house as though he were deeply hurt and afraid of being struck again."

Kathleen smiled. "You do understand Bob, don't you?"

"Yes," Lois answered wistfully. "But he doesn't think I do. He thinks I am only sorry."

"I see—" The girl with the midnight hair was too human not to be conscious of a heart lilt at this confession. "I guess that's why he and I have hit it off so well together. I never was sorry for him—but I did understand. Of course, my work—" "—in Mr. Carmody's office?"

"Yes. That gave me an insight which a non-working girl could not possibly have. And the fact that Uncle Todd looks on Bob almost as a son. You see, they were cell-mates."

They looked at each other. The smiles had been erased from their lips. They spoke now of tragedy, but they did it honestly and fearlessly.

"It is difficult to restore a man's confidence in himself and the world when he has been through what Bob has. You knew him before, Miss Borden; wasn't he sensitive—unusually receptive to impressions?"

"I think so. I don't know him very well. He was a sort of protégé of Dad's and I met him occasionally, but not often enough to know him well. Yet I'd say that he was sensitive; that he was an idealist and a romanticist and that life could etch easily and deeply on his soul."

Kathleen shifted her glance briefly to the deeply-lined, oldish-young face of the man whom they discussed. Her question came sharply and was apparently irrelevant:

"You've never been inside a prison, have you, Miss Borden?"

"No-o. But I shall visit one."

Kathleen understood what she meant. It was a final effort to understand something of what Bob had experienced.

"Even then," said Kathleen, "you won't understand entirely. You'll get a momentary glimpse, and you'll be horrified. Yet you'll be pleasantly surprised, too. Prisons now aren't the prisons of fiction. They aren't pest houses; they're clean and sanitary. What you will never learn from a single visit is the psychology of the place. That's how to understand prisons: to have someone there that you love—then in the middle of your enjoyment to stop and reflect that at that very moment this person is gazing into a granite-walled courtyard through iron bars; that he is a slave, a creature of a warden's whim or a guard's ill humor. I went often to the prison while Uncle Todd was there, and I'd say that the greatest thing a man is deprived of is the privilege of retaliation. He must accept whatever comes his way. If he has rights, he dare not voice them. And when I figure that all the three years Bob was there he was eaten with a bitterness born of the fact that he knew he was innocent—I don't wonder, Miss Borden, that he came out with a criminal psychology."

Lois looked up, startled.

"Did he?"

"Certainly."

"Dad suggested that—and I wouldn't believe him. He said that was the principal reason he invited Bob to our home and offered him everything in the way of material comforts—so he wouldn't face the temptation to give in to whatever criminal tendencies he might have absorbed. After all, crimes seem to be committed chiefly through the desire for money—or what money will buy—and Dad thought—"

"I understand, Miss Borden; and I think more of your father than I did. I didn't believe he had probed as deeply as you say he has."

"Dad is more human than he is credited with being."

The girls glanced at the immaculate, trim figure of Peter Borden. He was leaning forward, listening to some low-voiced story by Todd Shannon. Apparently, he was absorbed in what the giant was saying; certainly he had put Todd perfectly at ease. Kathleen smiled gratefully.

"Perhaps he is."

"You doubted it?"

"Of course. Why not be honest? I only knew of him through John Carmody and Bob Terry."

"I see—" Lois' eyes clouded. "And Bob hates him, doesn't he?"

Kathleen hesitated before answering. Then she paid the other girl the compliment of honesty.

"Yes."

"I knew it. He told me so." Lois put her hand on the other's arm. "Will it always be that way, Miss Shannon?"

"I don't know. Perhaps I'll surprise you when I say that I don't blame him. You see, I know so much better than you ever can know what he has been through. And I can put myself in his place to the extent of pretty well feeling what he has felt. For three years he has schooled himself to hate your father. He hasn't thought of anything else, because there wasn't anything else to think about. Perhaps—now that he is working—the feeling will pass off."

"In John Carmody's office?"

"Even there. It isn't Mr. Carmody, you see; it's the fact of being regularly employed—of taking his place in the world again—that will make the difference, I hope."

Lois was silent for a moment. "I want to ask you something, Miss Shannon."

"Please—"

"Very well. It is this: John Carmody hates my father. There is a good deal you can't tell me because you are his secretary. But I have the idea that Bob's employment by Carmody isn't entirely coincidental—that it is somehow linked up with that man's desire to wreck Dad."

Kathleen flushed. "I cannot comment on that, of course."

"I didn't expect you to. Frankly, the Carmody thing is not important in my mind—only I'm so afraid that Bob is falling into a net. Oh! it probably strikes you as silly—but it is my intuition and I can't help being frightened."

"For Bob?"

"Yes."

Again their eyes met and held. They knew that they were allies and rivals.

"I see Bob in the office every day," said Kathleen. "I watch him pretty closely."

"And," suggested Lois, softly, "you are trying to shelter him?"

"Yes."

A pause. Then, "Thank you, Miss Shannon."

CHAPTER XXVII

Kathleen felt herself flushing. Lois had told a great deal in those few words, and Kathleen was uncomfortable. She felt a sense of guilt—as though she should tell Lois that she and Bob were engaged. For a moment, she felt vastly inadequate to the man she loved. What had she to offer in comparison with this exquisite creature?

And Lois, too, was embarrassed. She had been betrayed by the depth of her emotion into a confession that she scarcely dared make to herself.

She glanced at her jeweled wrist-watch and rose hurriedly. As she crossed the room, she saw her father turn and direct a remark to Kathleen. He was superb tonight, the perfect host, watching his guests unobtrusively and laboring mightily—and successfully—to put them at ease.

Lois busied herself in the pantry. She had followed Peter Borden's lead. No butler—no maid. She arranged a tea wagon with a plate of little cakes and a cut-glass bowl filled with ambrosia: grapefruit and oranges and maraschino cherries cut up small and sprinkled liberally with shredded cocoanut. She returned to the room to find Kathleen and her father absorbed in conversation. She served the simple refreshments with the perfect manner of the born hostess.

Mrs. Newlywed kept her fowls in her back garden. "Are your hens good laying hens?" "Oh, yes," she replied in a delighted tone, "they haven't laid a bad egg yet!"

Millions of Families Depend on Dr. Caldwell's Prescription

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients. The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

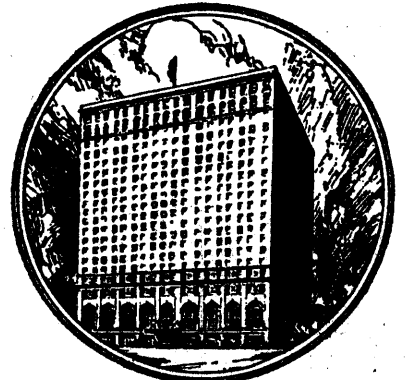

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies. It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

Detroit Bound You'll Always Hear

"Rooms are Larger at the Detroit-Leland"

There is no initiation into the great fraternity of those who travel. Yet it is legion—and it is one of the most exclusive in the world.

When a new contribution appears to add comfort and vivacity, you hear of it in the smoking rooms of crack trains, in the saloons of ocean greyhounds, or in the lounges of great hotels.

So, today, you hear—"Rooms are larger at the new Detroit-Leland—airier, more luxurious, and cuisine and service transcend perfection."

It is an endorsement that can not be bought, for the fraternity is jealous of its endorsements.

You who have envisaged the ideal hotel may safely follow those connoisseurs whose endorsements have brought international renown to the new Detroit-Leland.

ALMA ADDS NEW PROFESSOR TO STAFF

President Crooks has announced that Mr. L. L. Tyler, a man who has been in state educational circles for many years, has been secured to fill the newly established chair of Education at Alma College. Mr. Tyler will start his work at Alma next fall.

Mr. Tyler received his college training at Earlham College, from which institution he graduated. He took post-graduate courses at Chicago, Harvard, and Michigan Universities. He was awarded his master's degree from the University of Michigan. In addition to his master's degree he has a law degree from the same institution.

He has been for many years in the Michigan Public School system in executive positions. He has been superintendent at Three Rivers, Traverse City, and Muskegon Heights. In each city he has been known for his far-sightedness and ability in the field of education. It is entirely fair to rank Mr. Tyler as one of the state's leading superintendents of public schools. During the war he was for fourteen months with the A. C. F. as director of education in the Y. M. C. A.

For many years he has been prominent in state educational associations, holding many high and important positions in them. He has a state-wide reputation as a public speaker, and is much in demand for functions of various sorts.

Mr. Tyler comes to Alma to care for the Department of Education, which has grown very rapidly in the past few years, until it is no longer possible for Professor Randels, who has ably cared for this department in addition to his work in philosophy and psychology, to devote the time to education that it should have. Dr. Randels will concentrate his efforts on the courses in philosophy and psychology, as has been planned by President Crooks.

Professor of Education will be Mr. Tyler's official title at Alma. He will have charge of the employment bureau for students and graduates of the college.

Retire Point Betsy Light Keeper After 31-Year Service

Capt. S. M. Danielsen, United States lighthouse keeper at Point Betsy, was retired from that service after having completed more than 31 years. He was 65 years old.

Capt. Danielsen was born in Norway of Norse seafaring stock and after obtaining his education in that country he took to the seas. After several years service in sailing vessels in which he visited many countries, he came to America and shortly after entered the lighthouse service. His first assignment was aboard a lightship, from which he was appointed keeper of Poverty Island light-house. In recognition of his excellent service and record he has held commands at South Chicago light, Chicago harbor light and Point Betsy light.

It is the intention of Capt. Danielsen to visit Norway for a few months, and in token of the esteem in which he was held in Frankfort he was tendered a reception by his friends and was presented a traveling bag for his sea voyage. While of a sunny disposition and rugged character, Capt. Danielsen never has married.

Greenville Boys and Girls Form Spud Organization

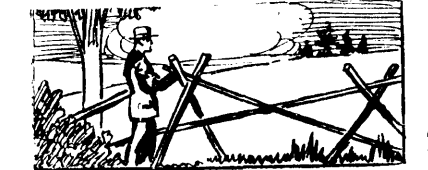

Organization of the Greenville Potato club, sponsored by the Rotary, was completed when 32 boys and girls of the vicinity as junior partners in company with their fathers were guests of their senior sponsors.

The Rotary "dads" will furnish seed potatoes, fertilizer and spraying material and inspect the plots regularly. The boys and girls agree to keep strict account of expenses and operations and to make exhibits at the November Greenville Potato show. B. J. Dobben and Frank Stevens are club leaders.

Poems That Live

OUT IN THE FIELD WITH GOD
The little cares that fretted me,
I lost them yesterday
Among the fields above the sea,
Among the winds at play,
Among the lowing of the herds,
The rustling of the trees,
Among the singing of the birds,
The humming of the bees.

The fears of what may come to pass,
I cast them all away
Among the clover-scented grass,
Among the new-mown hay,
Among the husking of the corn,
Where drowsy poppies nod,
Where ill thought die and good are born,
Out in the fields with God.
—Louise Imogene Guiney (1861-1920)

1928 OLYMPIC ELIMINATIONS IN 'U' STADIUM

The University of Detroit will be thrust bodily upon the athletic horizon during the latter part of June when the university, college and club track stars from all over the middle west meet in the university's stadium to decide who shall be included in the personnel of the Olympic teams.

The announcement was somewhat of a surprise, but officials of the Amateur Athletic Union have chosen the U. of D. amphitheater because it conforms to all the Olympic specifications. Arrangements for the meet were made by Jacob Mazer, chairman of the Michigan A. A. U. track and field committee, with our athletic director, Charles Dorais.

The dates for the competition have been set for June 29 and 30, four days after the swimming tryouts which will be held at the Detroit Boat Club on June 22, 23 and 24.

Four years ago the track and field meet was conducted at the University of Michigan. This entailed considerable expense, though, and Dinan field was selected instead. The Titan layout, while handier, also conforms to all requirements and places the track and field eliminations in a spot the equal in its class with the Boat Club pool.

Thirty-two events are spread over the two days of track and field competition, June 29 and 30. Of these many are at strange distances as all track events are meter affairs. Several of those certain to compete here stand more than an even chance of earning places on the team. University of Michigan will make a bold bid for track prestige, but the Illinois Athletic Club should extend any of the college leaders. Those athletes who brought the national high school championship to Northeastern high school, along with several from Northwestern are expected to make matters extremely interesting.

Reformed Church Reaches $1,000,000 Goal Pension Fund

The Reformed Church in America has reached its objective in a $1,000,000 ministerial pension fund as one of the crowning events in the tercentenary celebration to be staged in connection with its synodical session to be held in New York City in June.

Dr. George C. Lenington reports 558 of the 704 churches have accepted their quotas and 220 churches have paid their shares in full. Twenty-nine churches refused to contribute.

The fund went over the top through the munificent contribution of John Markle, member of the congregation of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas. Mr. Markle, from the John and Mary Markle foundation, has contributed through Dr. Malcolm James MacLeod $250,000 to complete the quota.

Zeeland Organizing First Scout Troop

First plans for the organization of a Boy Scout troop have been carried out by the Zeeland Community committee and the first boys' meeting has been held in the local junior high school. The troop will be formally organized within the coming month.

The local troop committee is composed of Supt. C. A. DeJonge, chairman; Martin J. Weersing, promoter; Willard Claver, inspector, George Caball, instructor, and Anthony Koolman, activities. William Vandewater, instructor of the local public schools, was appointed scoutmaster.

With the organization of the local troop of scouts boys' week was officially opened. Programs are to be staged in the local schools.

SUGGESTIONS

Storing Galoshes

Brush and clean the overshoes thoroughly both inside and out; then set them in a large, clean paper bag and fold the top of the bag over two or three times and paste down with gummed paper or library paste. Your galoshes are now ready to put away and will be clean and free from moths when you need them again next fall.

Ready-Cut Toast

Poached eggs on toast for an invalid are much easier to eat if the toast is first cut in small squares and then buttered, keeping the shape of the slice intact. Place the egg on the toast, which may be easily broken apart by the person in bed.

C. S. T. C. EXPECTS BIG SUMMER TERM

The most profitable summer term in the Central State Teachers' college history is anticipated for June 25 and classes will meet until Aug. 9.

The session is expected to be made more enjoyable by the accommodations and equipment provided by the new administration building, the resulting improvement in the other buildings, an augmented faculty, more new courses, excursions, conferences, assemblies and entertainments.

A large enrollment is indicated. Many alumni and former students have expressed intentions of returning for the summer term. Others will return to complete work on two-year life certificate courses since new rules of the state board of education provide that after Sept. 1, 1931, no life certificates will be granted for two-year courses.

New students entering Central this summer from high schools or without credit from other colleges or county normal schools will enroll on three-year courses if they desire life certificates. Hereafter two-year courses will lead to certificates good for five years with a renewal privilege of three years. Central's summer curriculum is especially attractive and complete for those who desire to study for bachelor of arts or bachelor of science degrees.

Special lectures and entertainments twice a week instead of once a week and social entertainments each week in addition to conferences and excursions will provide further education and recreation.

Ludington Would Keep Pastor Wanted By Detroit, Chicago

Rev. William George Flowerday has been unanimously requested by the official board and department leaders to consent to reappointment as pastor of First Methodist church. His four-year contract expires Aug. 30.

The request bears indorsement of Dist. Supt. Wheeler of Big Rapids, who expresses his gratification at having the church plant rebuilt and enlarged by an added community house at a cost of $75,000, and the addition of more than 200 members to the society.

Rev. Flowerday asked time to make a decision. He has been waited upon by committees from churches in Detroit and Chicago, asking him to become their pastor.

Traverse Girl Gets Scholarship to U. S. School Music Camp

Traverse City will be represented at the National High School Orchestra camp at Interlochen this summer through a scholarship offered by Mrs. Elsie R. Hannah.

Miss Vlasta Podoba, bassoon player in the high school orchestra, will be the one to use the scholarship.

Only exceptionally talented pupils are accepted for the camp, the aim being to have the pick of high schools throughout the country. The camp is limited to 300 boys and girls.

Nearly all the musicians at the camp will be from the larger high schools. In all cases they will be sent through scholarships, each costing $300.

Cherry Land Prepares For 10,000 Vacationists

More than 20,000 tourists are expected to visit the Door County peninsula during the cherry blossom time, according to estimates of the owners of some of the largest cherry orchards.

Last year hundreds from out of the state were visitors during the blossoming period. Each year the numbers increase as stories of the beauty of the peninsula circulate over the middle west.

Youth and Life

A Clearing House for Boys and Girls and Their Problems

By BOYD R. SWEM

BURN YOUR OWN SMOKE.
"The first law of life," says Lowell, "is to burn your own smoke." And I think he was right.

What causes smoke? When your carburetor feeds the engine too much gas for the air supply, the exhaust smokes. When the wick of the kerosene lamp or the farmer's lantern is not trimmed and adjusted properly, it smokes. When the furnace draft is insufficient; when the soft coal is heated without a supply of air reaching it; when the leaves are dead but not dry—in all these cases we have smoke.

But if we trim the lamp, adjust the carburetor, dry out the leaves, and so on, not only is the smoke nuisance eliminated, but the fire burns with more heat and more light as well.

Human Smoke
Whenever you get out of tune with your surroundings a sort of smoke is produced which, if not consumed, quickly becomes both a nuisance and a waste of power.

When you lose your temper, it is nothing but failing to burn your own smoke. Profanity is usually smoke. A person's regular vocabulary, the chimney through which ordinary conversation flows, gets choked, or won't let out the feelings fast enough, and out blows a flue and soot fills the air. Someone couldn't burn his own smoke.

Silliness, absurd giggling, extreme stubbornness, pouting, restlessness and a lot of other ills that growing youth is heir to, are just some of life's smoke. The engine may be mechanically perfect, but the carburetor is out of adjustment. The boy or girl may be perfectly normal and at heart fine and noble. Yet new fuel is being heaped on the fire. New experiences come thick and fast. The draft and chimney are not adequate. More energy is released than the human chimney is able to take care of. And it smokes.

What Is the Remedy?

To you, boys and girls, learn life's first lesson. Poise, charm, self-control, personality, reserve power—these are simply evidence that the owner is burning his own smoke. The same temptations and difficulties come into this life as into others; but mental and moral fresh air is fed in at the same time. And the chimney pours forth no soot. Not only do you avoid making yourself a social nuisance: you develop personal power.

And to you, parents of boys and girls: Remember you can't stop a smoky furnace by plugging the chimney. Yet this is exactly what many of you try to do. And then you wonder why it smokes worse than ever.

And it isn't much wiser to put out the fire. It stops the smoke, but the price is too high.

The true solution is to find the cause and adjust it. It is not easy, but it can be done. And your reward will be that the smoke will disappear of itself.

LIVING AND LOVING

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

THE SAME QUESTION

Letter after letter that I opened today gave me the same question to answer: How can my little friends win the love of certain young men? That would be difficult to answer if I knew both parties, but knowing neither personally, I feel I am a poor person to advise. I don't know of any better advice, girls, than that old saying: "If you can't have what you like, you must like what you can have."

Incidentally, don't get discouraged, Readers, if your letter does not appear very soon in these columns. We are far behind in our correspondence, but your answers will appear eventually.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I am a girl in my teens, and care for a boy a great deal. I would like to know how I could win his love.

"Broken Hearted."

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I care a great deal for a boy. I would like to know how to win his love. He talks to me, but never asks for a date.

"Broken-Hearted Sally."

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I have been keeping company for three months with a young man. We always had good times together, but for no reason that I know of he has quit coming. Dear Mrs. Lee, can you tell me what the reason is for his strange actions? Please tell me what to do?

"C. M. B."

To the first two I would say there is nothing you can do but be jolly and attractive and don't let the boys see you are pining for their love. Boys don't care for girls who run after them, so keep a stiff upper lip and "let concealment, like a worm in the bud, feed on your damask cheeks," if you must. And don't give up hope.

To C. M. B., you will probably meet your former friend before long and you surely have the right to ask him whether you have offended him. Don't pay any attention to his birthday unless he seeks your company again.

Almost every city has a bureau that finds work for handicapped people, E. V. L. T. Find out if there is one in your city and have your boy go there. I certainly don't blame you for wanting him at home with you if possible, although it is fine for him to learn to be self-supporting and self-reliant. Sales work would be good for him. Perhaps he could join a class where salesmanship is taught. He has certainly been very unfortunate, and I don't wonder you want him with you. I know I would feel the same.

A Broken Hearted Wife has a word to say about girls who are infatuated with married men. She says: "There are two silly girls trying to break up my home. I wonder how they would like it if they were in my position? I told my husband to go, if he wanted either of them, but he said, 'No!'"

Then why are you broken hearted, my dear? You should be doubly glad. First, that you have an attractive husband, and secondly, that he is true to you.

Personal and confidential:

Esther Ralston has an Aimee MacPherson sort of role in her next, "The Sawdust Paradise," which is about a woman evangelist. Only one movie maker has a Ph. D. degree—John W. Considine, Jr., John Barrymore's screen boss. Mayor Jimmy Walker of New York voluntarily plays a bit in Buster Keaton's new comedy about a news reel cameraman.

Charles Farrell is the son of the owner of movie theaters on Cape Cod. Douglas McLean was an automobile salesman once upon a time and Mr. Gloria Swanson, otherwise the Marquis de La Falaize, still is. William Powell, the villain, who plays Philo Vance in the screen version of "The Canary Murder Case," used to be a lawyer.

Here are some interesting figures from Cecil B. DeMille's balance sheet: "Male and Female," cost $168,619 and grossed $1,256,226. "Affairs of Anatol," cost $176,580 and brought back $1,191,245. "Manslaughter," cost $384,111 and grossed $1,202,130. "Ten Commandments," cost $1,475,836 and grossed over $5,000,000! That's the sort of money there is in the movie business.

At one time Estelle Taylor was model for Howard Pyle, who illustrates fairy tales. Jackie Coogan is spending all his time in school. Item in the biography of Roy D'Arcy put out by his company: "His favorite recreation is gold." Well, whose isn't?

SAFETY and TRACTION on the New GOODYEAR TIRES

You don't pay much attention to tires until you have trouble with them. But did you ever stop to think how important it is to have your car equipped with tires that will grip the road and STOP when you apply the brakes, and grip the road and START when you apply the gas?

The new Goodyear will do both these things better than any tire we know of.

A simple way to demonstrate this is to place the palm of your hand, flat on top of the tread of the new Goodyear and press down firmly. You'll feel the tread grip and PINCH the flesh of your hand. It grips, and actually pinches, the road in the same way.

Come in and try this yourself whether you need tires now or not. We want to explain this and the other reasons why the new Goodyear is called The World's Greatest Tire.
