"Nora, Wake Up" as presented by the Seniors at the opera house Friday night proved a winner in every respect, the parts were well prepared, each did well the part assigned and helped to make the occasion worth while. As we watch the progress of this class in their public appearances through their school years remember their first efforts in comparison with their senior efforts of Friday night we are again convinced that this part of their school work ranks high in importance with Latin, geometry or history. The specialties also went over big and we like to see our boys accept these chances to appear. Assure the community that they will have as good an entertainment as this and they will always fill the house.

Supt. Arthur Stratton has accepted a desirable position in the Birmingham schools. In his three years at the head of our schools Mr. Stratton has proved himself of real worth both in increasing the high standard of excellence of the schools and as a representative citizen doing his part in maintaining the high moral status of the community. We are most fortunate in being able to keep him for three years and Birmingham is more fortunate in that they will yet enjoy the benefits of having him in their midst and with the greater field, we believe he will go far and stay long. We join with the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Stratton in hoping that they may enjoy their new duties and new people as we have enjoyed their sojourn with us.

Following this a friendly hour of visiting when the ladies of the club entertained with song and playlets that completed another successful evening of pleasure.

Feeling no doubt that the original and serious papers and discussions of their regular programs were too deep for this occasion, the program was arranged along more humorous line with most satisfactory results.

Again the men are starting to look forward to the 1930 renewal of this event.

FORD ACQUIRES RELIC OF EDISON

The little old slate gray railway station, owned by the Grand Trunk railroad at Smith's Creek, a landmark of this section for 73 years, has been purchased by Henry Ford for his museum of pioneer days.

The automobile magnate is soon to remove the brick building which has considerable historical significance because of the fact that Thomas T. Edison, one of Ford's friends, is identified with it.

It is reputed to be the station at which Edison was dumped out when, as a newsboy on the Grand Trunk, his chemicals used for his printing press on the train became ignited and nearly set fire to the train.

Ford personally inspected the building about two weeks ago, according to neighbors who were visited by the automobile manufacturer, in his efforts to obtain telegraph instruments thought to have been used at one time in the old station.

Thomas Moore, 92 years old, who worked as a section laborer when the station was built, said he had told Mr. Ford all he knew about the building.

Fennville Is Optimistic Over Fruit Prospects

Ideal spring weather has imparted a general feeling of optimism among fruit growers in this section. Trees look to be in better condition than in many years. Buds, however, are beginning to show earlier than growers care to see them, as they fear frost injury. Peach prospects are reported to be the best in many years. Little or no winter injury to buds has been reported.

Payroll Growth Reported

Total payroll of the Motor Wheel Corporation, Lansing, for 1928 showed an increase of more than $2,000,000 over 1927, President Harper revealed in his report to the stockholders, amounting to $5,895,550, as compared with $3,575,539 for 1927. The average employment for the year totaled 2,931 persons, against 1,941 in 1927. The present payroll of 3,472 is the highest number in the company's history.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Medicine Ball Cabinet Gives Hoover Workout

Early risers in Washington, who peep into the White House grounds at 7 o'clock, catch a glimpse of the now famous "medicine ball cabinet" of President Hoover in action. Determined to safeguard his health, the president, with a few intimates to keep him company, heaves the six-pound ball for a brief period before breakfast. The men in the sketch above play almost every morning, and sometimes they are invited to breakfast at the White House. Left to right, President Hoover; Lawrence Richey, his personal secretary; Associate Justice Harlan F. Stone, of the Supreme Court; Ray Lyman Wilbur, secretary of the interior, and Joel T. Boone, White House physician.

STATE MASONS TO MEET IN PONTIAC

About 1,000 members of the Masonic lodge are expected to gather at Pontiac May 28 and 29 for the annual communication of the grand lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, F. Homer Newton, Pontiac, grand master of the lodge in Michigan, has announced.

Grand Master Newton also stated that the grand lodge has submitted plans and specifications for a new $750,000 Masonic home to be erected near Alma to the representatives of the lodges within his jurisdiction.

If the plans meet approval the new home will be built on 80 acres of land owned by the lodge near its present home at Alma.

G. M. C. Starts Suit

The General Motors Corporation, through its subsidiary, the Frigidaire Corporation, has started another patent suit in the U. S. District Court at Bay City with Judge Arthur J. Tuttle presiding, which suit is expected to involve about $1,000,000. The plaintiff claims infringement of a number of patents on an electric refrigeration machine by the General Necessities Inc., another manufacturer of electrical refrigerators. This suit is the second to which the General Motors Corporation has been a party in the federal district court in the last two years.

Uniform Fire Fighting Methods Are Sought

To establish a uniform system of maneuvers among the fire departments in Michigan cities, Fred P. Higgins, assistant fire marshal of Grand Rapids and president of the Michigan State Fire Marshals' Association, has announced a "fire college" will be held during the association's annual meeting at Sault Ste. Marie, July 8 to 11. The instruction will be given by Michigan State College faculty members.

State Pays $40,000 On $60,000 Tract

Frank E. Church, owner of property condemned for the construction of the Michigan avenue boulevard between Lansing and East Lansing, was awarded $24,000 for damages incurred to his property by the state highway department. The award was filed in circuit court by Warren Holmes, arbitrator in the case.

This award does not represent the total expense to the state. While only a few feet was condemned, the residence was removed to the rear of the lot and the expense of putting the property back in shape in which it was prior to the highway construction, already has cost the state $40,000.

When plans were being made for the building of this highway Church offered to sell his property to the state for $60,000. In addition to the cost of the property up to the present time, Church stated that he will file new claims for storing of his furniture during the period of construction and also for the rent he paid while forced to live in another house.

Buyers to Convene

By way of doing their part to help maintain America's extraordinarily healthy prosperity, approximately fifteen hundred industrial buyers will study the latest wrinkles of their profession at the fourteenth annual meeting of the National Association of Purchasing Agents to be held at the Hotel Statler, Buffalo, New York, from June 3 to 6, inclusive. The convention will attract the keepers of the purse strings in practically every industry in the United States, Canada and Mexico, whose combined buying power annually runs in the billions.

These industrial buyers will study commodity trends and business conditions, up-to-the-minute purchasing practices, new sources of supply, new services, and new products.

Airport Will Serve Orion and Oxford

Lake Orion and Oxford will probably qualify as the smallest villages in the state to be equipped with an airport, if success marks the efforts of a special committee of the Exchange clubs of the two villages to find a suitable site.

The clubs plan to locate the airport between Lake Orion and Oxford. The villages are three miles apart.

Interest in aviation has been enormously stimulated here during the last few months by the establishment of the plant of Gliders, Inc., in Lake Orion and the Glider flight of Amelia Earhart a few weeks ago, in which she gained the distinction of being the first woman in America to make a Glider flight.

Sturgis Light Plant Again Pays City's Cost

By a vote of 1,104 to 491 the voters of Sturgis adopted an amendment to its city charter which will permit the city commissioners to apply the surplus profits from the municipal hydro-electric plant to the general fund. This was done last year and the sum thus applied covered the total operating expenses of the city, with the result that no city taxes were levied.

The city claims to have the lowest electric light and power rates of any city of similar size in the state.

IRON ORE RESEARCH IMPORTANT MATTER

In instituting a state supported program of copper and iron research at the Michigan College of Mining and Technology, one of the governing factors was a realization of the necessity of developing methods of treating the vast quantity of low-grade iron bearing material in Michigan.

The question has been asked, "Other large organizations have their research staffs, why not the mining companies?" The answer is that research laboratories and organizations cost huge sums, which moderately prosperous mining companies can ill afford, and that the state of Michigan has, in Michigan Tech, one of the best mining and metallurgical laboratories in the country, equipped to conduct research in the most economical manner. Furthermore, it is regarded as a state problem, not a mining problem. Of every dollar received from iron ore from Michigan in 1927, the mining companies received only 5 cents. The state itself received more than that, in taxes, 5.85 cents. The land owners and brokers got 7.75 cents and the other 81.4 cents was received by the public for labor, supplies and services furnished.

The mining companies, it is pointed out, can transfer their operations elsewhere when present ores are exhausted. The homes and farms and businesses of Michigan citizens can not be transferred and they would become comparatively valueless. The public, therefore, has a most vital interest in perpetuating the mining industry—a far larger interest, in fact, than the mining companies.

The mining industry constitutes half of the total business of the upper peninsula of Michigan. It furnishes the chief market for the agricultural and timber industries. Without the mining industry these other industries would be most seriously crippled.

There are billions of tons of low grade iron rock that are too lean to be usable. There is reason to expect that research will find methods of making merchantable ore from this low grade material. If this is done, Michigan can mine ore for hundreds of years. In Minnesota, over a million dollars already has been expended on a similar problem. Minnesota ores, however, are of a different nature than those of Michigan, so a solution found in Minnesota could not be applied in Michigan.

The known iron ore reserves of Michigan are from 188,000,000 to 190,000,000 tons, this being the estimate of the Michigan Geological Survey. About 15,000,000 tons were shipped from Michigan last year. There has been extensive prospecting for other high grade ore bodies, millions of dollars having been spent in drilling. It is possible that additional ore bodies may be discovered, but such discoveries, it is asserted, are not likely to add 50 per cent to the life of the industry.

Buys 267 Yellow Busses

Public Service Co-ordinated Transport, subsidiary of Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, has placed an order for 267 busses with Yellow Coach Manufacturing Company, the motor coach division of General Motors Truck Corporation.

"It is circumstances which show what men are"—Epictetus.

Ford Airplane Business Trebled in 12 Months

During 1928 the Ford Motor company delivered 51 Ford planes to purchasers, approximately three times the number built and sold in 1927. The present production schedule calls for one plane every two days, but plans are being made for even larger production.

The manufacturing capacity of the Dearborn airplane factory was increased 400 per cent in 1928. At the beginning of the year factory equipment and personnel were capable of averaging one completed Ford all-metal trimotored plane each week. Only about 150 men were employed as compared with 1,200 now. During 1928 the factory turned out forty planes powered by the Wright Whirlwind engines and designed to carry twelve passengers, pilot and mechanic. Eleven airplanes were of slightly larger type, for fourteen passengers, pilot and mechanic.

Two models are now being manufactured—Model "A-AT," powered by Wright engines of 300 horsepower each; wing span seventy-four feet high speed of 126 miles an hour, and a cruising speed of 107 miles; seats for twelve passengers; a baggage hold and washroom. The second model, "5-AT," is powered by three Pratt & Whitney Wasp engines with 410 horsepower each; seventy-seven feet ten inches wing spread; accommodations for fourteen passengers.

The Pennsylvania Railroad and Transcontinental Air Transport have ordered ten planes of the 5-AT type to be delivered early this spring for service in the combination air and rail passenger service to be operated between Los Angeles and New York.

State Holds Up Paving of M-34

That improvement of state highway M-34 between Adrian and Hillsdale may be removed from the state highway department's building schedule for 1929 is believed likely by state highway officials.

Surveyors have just completed their work on a route recommended by the state, but petitions, letters and delegations have besieged the state offices so that officials are reluctant to give an order for construction until the residents of Lenawee and Hillsdale counties can come to some agreement as to the route desired. Grover C. Dillman, state highway commissioner, will make a personal inspection of the route.

Ludington Mapping Out Street Paving Program

Following a custom established last year in which abutting property owners were assessed 100 per cent of the cost of improvements, the city commission is laying plans for three extensive pavement projects this season. They include Gaylord avenue; East Court street, from Rath avenue to Washington avenue, and North Rowe street from Whittier street to the Carrom company's factory.

It is likely the work will be done with sheet asphalt, conforming to the other city streets. Wescott H. Read, acting city engineer, will submit estimates and surveys at the next meeting.

White Cloud Would Have Botanical Garden

Several projects have been brought before the chamber of commerce. It is proposed to make a botanical garden in the state park. In that section along the river it is estimated nearly a thousand specimens may be found in natural surroundings.

A scheme was considered to advertise the natural surroundings for tourists who wish to leave the thickly populated resorts along the great lakes.

A dealer in baits will be obtained before the opening of the trout season.

"White Cloud, Where the North Begins and the Pure Waters Flow," was adopted as a fitting slogan for the village.

"Never borrow money from that man, he is a Shylock. In winter he takes 50 per cent and in summer 60." "But why does he take more in summer?" "Because the days are longer." Flapper Fanny says: "Sable coats come from American goats."

5 CENT MILE RATE ALLOWED STUDENTS

Phelps Newberry, civilian aide to the secretary of war, has received instructions from the war department that no student attending the citizens military training camps at Camp Custer and Fort Brady this summer will be furnished with railroad tickets from their home to camp by the government.

Each student will purchase his own railroad tickets from his home to the camp he will attend and on arrival in camp the money will be refunded by the government at the rate of 5 cents a mile. On leaving camp after 30 days' training each student will be paid in cash for his transportation back home at the rate of 5 cents per mile, computed over the shortest usually traveled route. There is no objection to students going to camp and returning home in their own automobiles and this will not prevent them collecting the 5 cents per mile.

The war department also has notified Newberry the quota for the 6th Corps Area, of which Michigan is a part, has been increased to 4,700 young men, which is 400 more than the quota for the corps area in 1928.

In order to be sure that this number will be trained at the various training camps in the area, Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone, commanding general, has authorized the enrolling of 6,000 young men in the corps area. All over the 4,700 will be enrolled as alternates to be sent to camp in case illness or some other good reason prevents any of the young men from attending.

Newberry calls attention to the fact it will be necessary for young men planning on attending one of the Michigan camps this summer to get their applications in at once.

Everyone of the 83 counties in Michigan has a county committee in charge of enrolling men eligible for the camps.

In addition to these county committees application blanks for enrollment can be obtained from the members of any American Legion post in the state; from Phelps Newberry, 443 Book Tower, Detroit; from the commanding officer at Fort Brady, Sault Ste. Marie; from the chief of staff, 85th division, 438 Book Tower, Detroit.

Big Plane Rumored as Lindy's Honeymoon Ship

According to published rumors, which have gained wide circulation, the office ship of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh's transcontinental air line is slated to be the honeymoon ship of the flying colonel and his bride, Miss Anne Morrow. Raises 40,000 Bus. of Onions on Sixty Acres At Value of $60,000

Forty thousand bushels of onions, having a value of approximately sixty thousand dollars, were produced on sixty acres of land on the H. H. Driggs farm, near Ann Arbor last year, and plans are now being made to double the acreage and yield the coming season. One hundred and twenty acres are plowed and ready to be planted this spring.

During this last winter eight cement block houses, of five rooms each, have been erected for the workers to live in, and besides these there is a three apartment brick house, a farm cottage, a large storage barn and several other buildings that were erected previously. Altogether the place now looks like a small village and it is reported that one of the large power companies will soon extend its line and provide light and power.

This farm is located on what has always been known as the "Big Marsh" and this muck soil has proved to be unusually good for onion growing. The farms surrounding this muck land in a large area reaching back for miles are also of a high producing type.

It is interesting to note that the year 1923, one of the largest barns in the county was erected on a one hundred and sixty acre farm in this locality, and in good crop years the owner has it filled "to the brim." Raising general crops, growing corn and alfalfa and feeding stock has enabled the farmers in this area to erect good buildings and these buildings, most of them well painted, add beauty and attractiveness as well as real value as monuments to prove that the soil is productive.

In the year 1916 the New York Central Railroad company endeavored to meet the requirements of this high producing area by putting in a switch between towns, known as "Hogan's Siding." This siding is still in operation and is a great convenience but modern methods of transportation demand that we must also have highways, to accommodate heavily loaded trucks, and residents of this area hail with delight the prospect that this section may be traveled in the near future by a paved road, built by the state.

The evidence furnished by recent developments, if compared with past history, would seem to indicate that there is at least one farming locality in Washtenaw county that is not only holding its own but is rapidly approaching the boom stage.

Prepare Steer For Fall Show

Exhibitors of steers in the fat steer classes at the Michigan State Fair next fall are already fitting their animals for their appearance in the show ring, according to statements by members of the animal husbandry department at Michigan State college.

Showmen who win top premiums in the fat stock shows must be able to visualize what an animal will look like in future months, and they must be able to carry through a feeding program which will model in living flesh the show points which catch the judge's eye.

All animals entered in the steer show are entered subject to sale in the auction ring. Last year's winner was auctioned off by Governor Fred W. Green for 86 cents per pound. The governor will call for bids on the 1929 champion.

Animal husbandry men at State College say that Michigan exhibitors of fat steers are showing better fitted animals each successive year. Fat stock shows now feature the baby beef type of cattle as the show ring reflects the type of animal demanded by the consumers of beef.

Five hundred dollars of prize money, a silver trophy for the champion, and a very attractive auction sale price are the awards which will be given to the winners this year in the fat steer show.

64 Counties Now Have Farm Agents

Michigan is rapidly approaching the time when 100 per cent of its counties will be employing agricultural agents in co-operation with the extension department of Michigan State College and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Eight new counties have employed farm agents during the past year, bringing the total number of counties co-operating in the extension work to 64. Lake and Montmorency counties were the latest to hire agents.

L. D. Thomas, agriculture teacher at Belding, started work April 1 in Lake county, while H. D. Lakin of Portland soon will begin work in Montmorency county.

Nineteen counties still have no organized agricultural extension services. They are: St. Joseph, Ionia, Montcalm, Shiawassee, Lapeer, Isabella, Mason, Arenac, Iosco, Oscoda, Gladwin, Leelanau, Grand Traverse, Crawford, Roscommon, Mackinac, Alger, Baraga and Keeweenaw.

Operates Trapping, Pays School Expenses

Despite the fact that professional fur trapping is almost a lost vocation in the north woods of Michigan, William Bietzel, 17, Iron Mountain high school junior, had a profitable winter on his trapline. He has taken several foxes, a few mink and other fur bearers and his total receipts from his traps will reach the $200 mark.

Bietzel has reinvested a large share of this income in traps and other equipment and plans to operate on a much larger scale next winter. He has financed his way through school this year with the proceeds of the trapline.

He has gone over the line each Saturday, operating alone, often miles from home and staying over night in farm houses, abandoned camps or cabins which he built for himself.

Lambs for early market should be kept growing from the very beginning, and the best way to accomplish this is by feeding them through a "creep." Provide a rack for hay and a trough for grain, arranged so that the lambs can not get their feet in them. Liberal feeding of lambs dropped before pastures are ready is profitable with average grain prices.

Need Costs Expert In Michigan Herds

Efficiency engineers who have charge of only one factory have a simple job in comparison to the testers in the Michigan herd improvement associations, who are efficiency engineers for 2,500 factories located in 25 different places, according to the statement of members of the dairy department at Michigan State College.

The dairy experts say that each cow in the state associations can be considered to be a factory engaged in the processing of low priced raw materials into a higher priced quality product. The difference between the qualities of different cows to do this manufacturing profitably can be determined only by measuring both the raw materials and the quantity of product returned for the feed.

Production cost records are being kept on 25,000 Michigan cows which belong to the members of 96 herd improvement associations. The animals themselves represent an investment of approximately half a million dollars and this is only a fraction of the money invested in the great number of cows upon which no records are kept.

A part of this money value is frozen capital upon which the herd owner receives no income or suffers a loss. One-third of Michigan's dairy cows are kept at a loss, and one-third return no profit.

The cow tester's feed cost records enable the dairyman to weed out the animals which do not show manufacturing efficiency.

Carelessly Cut Potato Seed Is Cause of Many Missing Hills

Cut seed potatoes may be planted immediately after cutting or they may be kept for several days. But prolonged delay of planting after the seed has been cut, lowers the vitality of the seed, especially if the seed pieces are small. The practice of spraying the cut seed with lime is of doubtful value though not injurious to the seed.

The size of the seed pieces is more important. Small seed pieces under dry soil conditions may result in poor stands and in weak plants. Larger seed pieces are better. One or two eyes to each piece should be the rule. One eye, with pieces planted 12 inches apart, should give a maximum yield. Seed pieces with many eyes produce too many stalks to the hill, resulting in many small tubers.

Varieties vary greatly in the number of eyes to the tuber, also in the vitality or germinating powers of eyes from different parts of the tuber. Since a potato tuber is botanically the same as a twig or shoot of a plant, the bud or seed end of the tuber is the first to grow and the buds are most active, while the eyes on the lower end and close to the stem are the older and are more or less dormant. They start to grow more slowly and very often produce weak and unproductive plants. This is particularly true of varieties like the Russet Burbank, Russet Rural, Rural and the Brown Beauty. In cutting the seed of these varieties, one should take care that each cutting has an eye at least half-way up the tuber. A large share of the missing hills comes from careless seed cutting. Machine cutting is not advisable except when large acreages are planted and when the time element is important.

If whole seed is planted, the grower should grow his own seed for seed purposes only. Such planting should be later than the main crop and by planting closer, say 9 inches by 36 inches or 10 inches by 34 inches, suitable whole-seed tubers may be obtained.

Poultry

FEED FOR THE YOUNG

WATERFOWL FLOCK

Ducklings or goslings do not require any feed until they are from 24 to 36 hours old. Then they can be given small amounts five times daily. For the first few days a mixture of bread crumbs, rolled oats and a little corn meal is satisfactory. A small amount of sand should be added to this mash to aid the birds in digesting their feed. Green feed should be furnished to both types of birds from the start. Goslings are great grazers and will not grow properly unless they have a liberal supply of green feed. In many respects ducklings are the same.

A satisfactory ration after the first few days consists of 30 pounds wheat bran, 30 pounds low grade wheat flour or middlings, 30 pounds of corn meal, 10 pounds green feed and five pounds meat scraps. After they are two weeks old they can be fed three times daily.

As the birds get older they will not need to be fed so often if they have good range. On good range they will do well if given grain twice daily. If range is not good, the meat scraps should be continued so as to aid in the development of their frames. If bugs are plentiful, this is not necessary.

Watering vessels for both ducks and geese should be deep enough so they can immerse their bills. The vessels should be convenient to the feeding places so the birds can drink and eat at the same time. The water must be deep to enable them to rinse the sand and feed out of their nostrils.

Birds that are to be fattened for early market should be kept on a ration such as suggested above. Those that are to be marketed in the fall will secure most of the growth on range plus one or two feeds of grain daily.

USE FRESH GROUND

The importance of raising chicks on fresh, clean soil cannot be overestimated. This is especially true of heavy soils. Light sandy soils are more easily washed by rains and hold less contamination, but even in that there is danger if older fowls carrying worms or germs of infectious diseases have ranged considerably over the ground, as is often the case with stationary poultry houses. The small brooder house arranged for easy moving is the easiest way of providing fresh, clean range for the chicks. In cases where stationary buildings must be used, the next best thing is to spade up every inch of ground on one side or end of the house, cover it with a few loads of sand, gravel or fresh soil, and confine the chicks to this until they are two or three months old. If the house itself has been well disinfected, the floor renewed with fresh soil, if of earth, and everything used made clean and free from germs, there should be no disease to contend with, provided the chicks are hatched from perfectly healthy stock.

There is absolutely no valid objection to this plan of confining chicks to a yard for weeks. The best chicks we have ever raised have been raised in yards 25 feet square per 300 chicks. In this way they get a start free from lice or worms with no possibility of bacterial infection from older fowls.

It is not as much work to raise chicks this way as when they have free range, if automatic feeding and watering devices are used; no danger of their being caught out in sudden storms too far from shelter; no danger from stray dogs or automobiles, and they will grow faster than on the average range. The all-mash method of feeding has proven unquestionably good up to three or four months of age, which eliminates any danger of chicks ever going hungry if hoppers are kept filled. Fresh cut grass and weeds, particularly dandelions, furnish greens, which is the only thing lacking in the yard that is essential.

CHICK RAISING HINTS IN NEW WORDS

From time to time we have been giving advice and hints on raising baby chicks. Since this advice may become tiresome when repeated too often in our own words, we are taking the liberty of using the words of J. W. Miller, Rockford, Ill., in enumerating the following nine points to be remembered in managing and feeding baby chicks.

1. Do not give new hatched chicks food or drink until 48 to 72 hours old.
2. Do not give the flock more than about one-half ounce, or an even tablespoonful, of feed for every 20 chicks, at first.
3. Allow the chicks only five or six minutes to pick up what food they want; then take away what is left.
4. Do not give chicks cold water to drink. Have it lukewarm.
5. Keep drinking vessels and everything about the brooder house perfectly clean.
6. After chicks are four or five days old, let them run out in the grass. If no grass is available, provide green food of some kind.
7. Always give chicks as much sunlight as possible, and prevent drafts of cold air on the floor of the brooder house.
8. Feed chicks four or five times a day, and allow only one person to feed and care for them.
9. When the chicks are two and three weeks old, feed plenty of green food, and increase the amount of food. Always keep clean, sharp sand or grit of some kind on the floor.

MARION CLEVELAND stopped her roadster at the gate of an old house that sat by the wayside. "Well, Cousin Phyllis," said Marion, turning lovely green eyes on her middle-aged relative, "here is the old Cleveland homestead, and it looks wickedly long overdue to me!"

Cousin Phyllis spoke dismally. "Well, Marion—let us go and find Letty Brown and then look for Sam Willis to clear up the yard."

Marion started the car and they sped down the street and stopped at the lane where Letty Brown lived. Cousin Phyllis alighted and went to see about Letty herself. Presently she came back with a stout, comfortable colored woman who greeted Marion with indulgent affection.

Letty climbed into the rumble seat which, with her belongings, she fitted snugly. She sat there proudly as the roadster went along and stopped at a small, mean house with closed shutters.

"Sam Willis, ma'am, he's left town," informed Letty.

"I guess, ma'am, it was dreckly after he rented your house to the artist—about a month ago."

"What artist? What right had Sam to rent it?"

"Mr. Adams, ma'am, I think his name is—is a real nice, harmless gentleman. He lives in the little east wing and eats at the inn. Spends a lot of time out on the bay—just goes out the back gate and gets into his boat and off he goes paintin'."

"What did Judge Lanis think about it?" asked Marion Cleveland.

"Oh, I reckon de judge don't think nothing more about yearthly things, ma'am. He went to glory about two months ago."

Just then the roadster drew up at the gate.

They entered the great dusky hall and Marion threw open the doors into large rooms where a green gloom lingered, for all the window shutters were tightly closed.

"You go and raise all the window shades and open the shutters and then the windows," commanded Miss Phyllis. When Letty had departed on her window job, Miss Phyllis suddenly grasped Marion's arm and whispered in her ear. "Did you hear a sound upstairs?"

Marion nodded. "A cautious sound as if someone was there who had no right to be there! Suppose we find the painter, Mr. Adams, first."

Then they went outside and knocked at the outer door of the two-roomed wing, and the door opened and revealed a young man in a painter's smock, with a pipe between his lips. He smiled pleasantly.

"Are you Mr. Adams?" inquired Cousin Phyllis, and that being settled, the lady sat down on the steps and told how Sam Willis had abused a trust. When she had told the whole story, Mr. Adams shook his head gravely.

"I am sorry, Miss Cleveland, but while I thought it queer that such a character as Willis should be in charge of this fine old place, he gave me what appeared to be a good receipt for the rent, and not so long ago, suddenly appeared one night and collected for another month. So you see I have paid the rent up to the first of October. Of course, if you consider it an intrusion, I will pack up and go over to the inn tonight, but I hope that you will let me stay. You see, I am painting your old place from the bay, and it is getting along pretty well."

Just at that moment they heard Letty's voice lifted in shrill screeches from the front of the house, and Adams brushing hastily past them, hurried to the front yard.

"Yes, sah!" sobbed Letty hysterically. "I was opening this here shutter when suddenly I turned my eye round and I see the front door opening, slow—slow-like and then I see an eye and a nose—white man's nose, and then I yelled and he dodged back again."

"Be calm, Letty, no harm will come to you. Just some tramp, I suppose." Then he suddenly darted away toward the back yard and the women heard masculine voices in argument. Presently Mr. Adams returned and in his strong fingers was the shirt collar of Samuel Willis, who looked frowzier than ever, and very much ashamed.

"Just caught him sneaking out of the back door, Miss Cleveland," he said to Cousin Phyllis. "Sam is awfully ashamed of himself, but Satan certainly tempted him to rent the east wing to me and pocket two months' rent. He has been hiding in the attic over your summer kitchen, going over to Beavertown nights for a good time and to buy supplies, and then coming back here to hide. He hasn't spent all the sixty dollars yet, have you, Sam?"

Sam shamefacedly paid most of the sixty dollars to Miss Phyllis and meekly cleared up the whole place into immaculate order.

When the first of October came, John Adams was so much in love with Marion that he confessed it to Miss Phyllis. "I guess it is mutual, John, smiled Miss Phyllis, "and we certainly need a man around the place!"

So he married Marion and they are still there.

We are ready for your job work. Bring it in today.

WEEK OF APRIL 21

Moderately warm weather for this time of year is expected at the very beginning of the week of April 21. During Sunday and Monday we are expecting some storms of rain or snow which will be quickly followed by a marked change to much colder weather.

There is reason to believe that the cold coming out of the west and north at this time will bring ruination to any early crops growing in Michigan unless well protected by glass or other means of heat.

The middle days of this week will be generally fair and cold. About Thursday there will be a moderately rapid rising of the thermometer. This action of the elements will be a warning of the rain and wind storms to follow, which will affect Michigan during the closing days of the week.

The barometer in Michigan will reach a low point within 24 hours, centering on Friday, and much precipitation will fall in most parts of the state. The wind storms at this time will be severe and bordering on tornado characteristics.

Best Days This Week

So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. JACK and JILL

By CLIFFORD WEBB

(Copyright, 1928, the Central Press Association, Inc.)

CHAPTER XXXIII

"Listen, Tony," said Jill, when the girls had gone to their rooms to dress for dinner, leaving her brother, Jack, and herself in her room, "I'm gonna give you a scolding."

"Shoot," said Tony, spreading out his chest. "I can stand for anything once."

"You know as well as I do," she proceeded forthwith, "that to make a success of this venture we've got to travel a straight and narrow course. Cocktails and Black Bottom don't associate with each other on congenial terms. You'll recall what th' manager said today:

"I don't want any hootch-hounds in my employ," he told us. 'Not even among his entertainers,' he said. They won't stand for it, Tony!"

"Where d'you get that stuff, anyhow?" erupted Tony, waxing wroth and swelling up very like a poisoned pup. "Just because a cocktail makes your face red and your nose shiny you never drink any. So you want to regulate things for other people. You just watch your own step, sister! I'll keep an eye on mine!"

"That's my advice, also, Jill," vouchsafed Jack, with quick forethought, lest she take the notion to include him in her scolding. "A man may do many things a woman can't do, and get away with it. Just see to it that your own foot doesn't slip!"

Before Jack's return to Elliston Tony had proven the truth of his brother-in-law's original remark that "a man may do many things a woman can't do."

It was because of some of the things a woman could do, however, that Master Tony didn't lose his dancing job, even before he had started working at it. A woman could humble herself before a cafe manager, and plead that a weak brother be given another chance. That had been Jill's privilege their first night in Pittsburgh.

She had observed, during the dinner, that Tony and Jack were more than ordinarily exuberant. At 10:30 the manager came to her room. Four of the girls, Mike, Billie, Ann and Amity were with her.

"I'm very sorry, Mrs. Stuart," said the manager, addressing her from just inside the door, "but I'm afraid we shall have to cancel our contract. There is a clause in it, as I pointed out to your brother and you, regarding alcohol. I will not tolerate drinking among my employees, servants or entertainers. Your brother is down in the Palm room now, but I shall not permit him to go on the floor. He has been drinking."

Jill had no difficulty in finding Tony. Jack and he, surrounded by a coterie of young hoofers and flappers, with Nita Ravelle and the professor looking on and applauding discreetly, were holding forth on the merits and demerits of various famous dancers.

Jill, with feeling better imagined than described, managed finally, with Mike's aid, in coaxing Tony into another room. Jill told herself that Jack was responsible for Tony's condition—that he didn't want her to go through with the dancing contract. In this respect, however, she was wrong. Jack had really tried to keep Tony from drinking with the hoofers and flappers, and in the effort had been drawn into drinking himself.

Mike and Jill finally succeeded in convincing the manager that Tony would be all right if allowed to go on the floor.

"But not again!" the manager warned them. "Liquor is one thing I will not permit among my employees. Its use I cannot prevent among my guests, but I can prevent it among those who work for me, whether it is in a menial capacity or as entertainers!"

Instead of gratitude to Jill for saving the situation, Tony's manner indicated a feeling of resentment on his part.

"I suppose you feel better now," he said, grumpily, when they had been on the floor half an hour and were taking a short rest.

"You showed me up properly before Mike Sweeney," he went on, irritably, "bringing her in there th' way you did."

Jill felt sorry for him, just as she was eternally feeling sorry for others, and occasionally for herself. Hers was a big, generous heart that ached at the sight of suffering, no matter who the sufferer might be, as in the case of Amity Smythe, when Mike "cut" her.

So it was now. Tony had "got himself in bad" by drinking. She had humiliated herself by interceding and saving his job for him. In return, instead of a manly apology and thanking her, he was accusing her of a meanness, the nature of which he knew she was incapable. And yet, when she saw that he was suffering, even though it was his own fault, she straightway forgave him his surly injustice and felt sorry for him. It must have been of such a woman that Crabbe wrote:

"Man may the sterner virtues know, Determined justice, truth severe, But female hearts with pity glow, And woman holds affliction dear; For guiltless woes her sorrows flow, And suffering vice compels her tear; 'Tis hers to soothe the ills below, And bid Life's fairer views appear!"

The "sterner virtues of determined justice," as mentioned in the preceding lines, would have sanctioned the telling of Jill's kid brother, just what a selfish, ungrateful cad he was. Instead, she had only pity for him now, in his moment of suffering.

"It's tough, old dear, I know," she sympathized with him in his whimpering. "But just keep a stiff upper lip."

"Yeh-ah," came the irritable retort, "it's easy 'nough for you to say

—keep a stiff upper lip, it don't cost anything—advise don't!"

Then the contemptible unfairness, the unmitigated selfishness embodied in his disgruntled reproaches, must have combined to bring him to something like a realization of the truth. This was indicated a moment later, when he spoke again.

"Forgive me, Jill, old scout!" he grunted huskily in her ear as they glided across the floor. "I'm a darned rotter, talking to you in this way. But, honest, I feel so mean I want to bite myself. Forget it, Sis—if you can!"

In a commodiously furnished apartment on the fourth floor of the Alphacrest hotel, two persons, a man and a woman, sat in deep-cushioned chairs drawn up in friendly tete-a-tete. There was a humidor of cigars. Sociability marked the setting of the scene. But underneath the casual surface of things lurked the makings of a tragedy.

In the liquid depths of the woman's eyes, dark, brooding and inscrutable, lay a lazy sensuousness, the red emblem of danger, had the man but understood.

"Listen, Tony," said Jill, "I'm gonna give you a scolding!"

"Oh, you'll marry again some day, Nita," he laughed in response to her declaration as to matrimonial prospects. "As pretty a woman as you are can't escape for more than a year or so, even if she tries."

She shook her black-haired, boyishly-bobbed head—a beautiful head, as he had frequently noted.

"If I were foolish to marry again," she said, just the hint of a sardonic smile twisting her full, red lips, "I'd lose my steady, sure income of $12,000 a year. And it isn't every man, believe me—even if rich—who gives his wife a thousand dollars a month, just to spend on herself!"

"Granted," he said, helping himself to a cigaret from the ornate humidor, one of the trifles she had brought along in her big leather bag, "but don't you consider that love is of more value in the last, the final summing-up of things in our chase for happiness, than is the acquirement of, or the spending of money?"

He believed he knew about the sort of answer she would make, and was nowise surprised at the accuracy of his surmise.

"Love—in a matrimonial cage—to a woman long accustomed to every luxury," she averred, studying him covertly, "is like a one-piece salad minus any dressing—utterly devoid of savor!"

"You say 'love in a matrimonial cage.' You believe in the sanctity and need of the marriage bond, don't you?"

"For the social protection of a woman, yes."

"Your husband was 60 years old. You didn't, of course, love him. Have you ever been in love, Nita?" he asked curiously.

CHAPTER XXXIV

Nita Ravelle laughed softly, but the slumberous passion that lay brooding in the depths of her hypnotic eyes glowed with life.

"Are you merely curious?" she queried, "or would you really like to know?"

"Both," he replied, frankly. "Other people's love stories always interest me. Yours, I think, would be of special interest!"

As their glances met he seemed to see, or perhaps he actually saw, the dull glow in her black eyes kindle, to brighten into a living flame that burned its way through the ether and into his very veins, running riot through his arteries. He felt himself rising to his feet.

In No. 264, on the second floor of the Alphacrest hotel, a woman stood before a cheval mirror, looking, apparently, at the exquisite figure reflected in the clear glass.

But she saw no reflection. Her eyes, perhaps, envisioned it, but her brain was not working in juxtaposition with her eyes. Her mind was visualizing a scene photographed on the brain's negative, a scene that had evolved itself out of the materials of her own logic and tabulated sociability. She couldn't envision that scene with her eyes, but she could visualize it on the lens in her mind.

How long she stood there would have been difficult for her to have told. Perhaps 20 minutes; maybe half an hour.

It was the physical ache that finally awakened her from the semi-conscious from the stiffness of her knees that she must have been standing in the one position for many minutes.

"She, too, felt the craving for a stimulant, the stimulant of a love that had grown into every crevice of her heart and soul, into every fibre of her vibrant young body—a stimulant that hypnosis of her thoughts. She knew now was being denied her after four years and more of daily assimilation. It had become to her the complete analogy of a habit-forming drug, this love that had been hers so long.

Who, or what had taken it from her? Was it another woman? or, was it—the curse of Easy Money?

Before the coming of the money Jack and she had been happy in each other's love, however hard the pinch of poverty had seemed. Their babies, their love—and their trust.

And now—what? From the very day the money was placed in the bank, life to both of them had been just one endless job of pleasure seeking—a ceaseless battle for excitement. Where were the old delightful times? Where had gone the peace and joy such as they had known in the happy old working days?

How many a woman—and man—fools of fortune—have asked themselves similar questions? How many have felt the sting of the curse that follows so often in the wake of Easy Money's acquisition?

It is, perhaps, much as Father Ryan told Peter Justin one day in a discussion of the topic:

"It is not the money, of course," said the priest, "but the evils that money attracts. Only a few of us have the strength of character, the judgment and good sense to hold ourselves down to normal."

"And that," continued the good padre, warming to this subject, "is the greatest little secret in the world, the fundamental principal upon which all lives must operate for happiness."

"Equalization, a proper balance of all things, either in the concrete or the abstract."

"Easy Money is often the medium of dissension that enters and wrecks the happy, contented family."

"The psychology of the thing is plain. . . . It opens the doors to gilded evils that are locked against the fellow with the puny purse."

"Some day," concluded Father Pat, "the world will be educated up to a full understanding of this truth—that normality is the basis of all perfection in life. Excesses, the fruits of Easy Money, turn to bitterness and decay. They are the dead husks of disillusionment!"

"Father Pat was right," muttered Jill Stuart, half aloud. "Th' crops we reap from the follies we sow. Like the flowers that bud and bloom, then wither and blow away in the cold ashes of disillusionment!"

She clenched her fists and struck her breast in a senseless, impotent rage. She wanted to cry, to tear something. But she didn't. She got a grip on herself, and gradually her anger passed, spent itself in the melting-pot of normalcy.

She was sitting on the edge of one of the two beds, garbed in white silk pajamas, when Jack entered the room. The gold hands of her tiny silver clock on the dresser pointed to the hour of two.

He grinned, a sheepish, guilty grin, as she looked up at him. But in her eyes he read no anger, no irritableness even; only grief.

A little hurriedly, and with something like apology in his manner, Jack rendered his alibi. Inasmuch as it was partly true, it was a fairly good alibi—as alibis go. They had been—"they," being Tony, the professor and himself—in Nita Ravelle's room.

"They" had rolled dice, played Black Jack—and talked. He hadn't realized until the "happened" to glance at his watch, the lateness of the hour.

Jill offered no comment on his explanation. She could have told him that Tony had stopped at her door on his way from Nita Ravelle's room, where he had left Jack and the professor. But she didn't. Nor did she mention that the professor had telephoned her shortly afterward from his own room—just to assure her that Jack would be right down."

That was at 1 o'clock, she might have told him. But she didn't.

She just slipped quietly beneath the covers of the bed on which she had been sitting and closed her eyes. He spent some time under the shower, took a brisk rubdown, and then—so as not to disturb her, presumably—crawled into the other bed.

The members of Mike's party—with the exception, of course, of Jill and Tony—departed shortly after 12 o'clock luncheon on Sunday for Elliston. They bade good-bye to the two "hoofers," who watched the departure through the plate glass window of the hotel lobby as the big limousine pulled away from the curb. A moment later and it had disappeared in the motley traffic of the narrow street in the city famous for its narrow streets.

It was a dully aching heart that Jill Stuart carried back up to her apartment on the second floor. She had observed the studied air of indifference that had marked the attitudes of Jack and Nita Ravelle toward each other. But they were poor actors, both of them, and overplayed their parts.

Days passed—as days will do, even in a small town like Elliston. Come Friday, and with it came Tony Justin, back to the home of his nativity, back to the town of tall smokestacks and glass-baking ovens.

But he came alone, did Tony. The partner of his sporadic "career" remained in the city of narrow streets, coal smoke and huge steel mills.

"But you say your contract is canceled," said Jack Stuart, who had been aroused from his "beauty" slumber at the early hour of 10 a. m. and was feeling none too sociable. Tony had come straight from the train to the Stuart apartments. Jack looked him over speculatively.

"Why didn't Jill come with you?" he wanted to know.

"Oh, I'm th' one that's let out," sneveled Tony, his manner indicating deep grievance. "Jill has a new contract. And—" he added, his voice taking on an indigo tint—"a new dancing partner! Oh, yes—indeed!" he went on quickly, in answer to his brother-in-law's inquiring look, "and I'm tellin' yuh plain, Jack, that I'm good an' sore at th' thing was fixed!"

Be it noted, incidentally and here, that when Tony Justin became entirely sober and gave careful thought to the words he had uttered under the influence of drink and his "grievance," he tried to smooth out their effect on his sister's husband. He realized he had played the part of an utter cad.

"But—her partner?" prompted Jack, an angry light beginning to glow in his eyes, "tell me—who is this partner?"

"Why, it's that Professor Le Tarte—who else?" answered Tony, feeding his grievance with indignant recollection of the professor's quick adaptability and skill in stepping into his place. "I was sick Tuesday night—unable to go on. Then what does Jill do but up and ask him to let her get another partner and—that's what she did; called up Le Tarte!"

CHAPTER XXXV

"And so he's her partner now, eh?" The angry light in Jack Stuart's eye had grown into an ugly glitter. Never had he liked the professor from the hour of their first meeting, and now.

"I tell you, Jack, you're letting your wife make a fool of you!" This was the consoling opinion, contemptuously given, that Jack Stuart obtained from Nita Ravelle that same afternoon. She was sitting cross-kneed in one of his luxurious office chairs. Hers was just a "sociable" call, and therefore they could discuss personal affairs without transgressing business ethics.

"I could have told you yesterday," she went on, in spiteful resentment against his expression of faith in Jill, "that she had asked th' professor to join her in place of her b' rother. But you wouldn't have believed me!"

"I know, Nita," acknowledged Jack, indicating by his words the nature of the conversation, or rather, its trend. "It has a suspicious look, perhaps, this taking him on as a partner, but—"

He broke off, shaking his head in refusal to accept appearances as prima facie evidence of infidelity. "You gotta bear in mind," he went on stubbornly, "I've lived with Jill for more'n four years. I know her character pretty well. She'll take a chance sometimes and skate pretty close to th' edge of—er—things. But she's straight—I know that. Of course, I don't like this professor being her partner. But to think of starting proceedings for a divorce on account of it—why, that's a little raw, I think."

As a matter of fact, when Tony got sober and told me th' true state of affairs, I can't say that I really blame Jill for acting as she did. Anyhow," he added, a bit lugubriously, "I'm scarcely in a position to make such an awful roar!"

"Supposing she refuses to give up her dancing job with Le Tarte?" queried the woman with the $12,000 annuity. "Would you swallow your medicine—admit yourself to be playing second fiddle to another man?"

"See here, Nita—I want you to cut out this innuendo stuff!" barked Jack, unmistakably angry, as she could see. "Jill's my wife and I'll not let anyone, woman or man, speak slightly of her. No man ever had a better and truer wife than Jill's been to me. She stood for a lot when we were so poor we scarcely knew where th' next meal was coming from. Not once did she ever squawk. And I don't think I've got any squawk coming now, even if she does flirt a little now and then!"

Even so, she won't refuse to cut th' professor out as a partner when she knows just how I feel about th' matter!"

But either Jack was trying to bluff himself, as well as "the lady of the big alimony," or else he was not as well acquainted with his wife's nature as he imagined himself to be.

For refusal—emphatic and definite—was Jill's instant reply upon being informed that she must cancel her dancing contract with Professor Le Tarte.

CADDILAC TO STAGE FIRST
PAGEANT JULY 4

The first historical pageant ever to be held in northern Michigan, so far as can be ascertained, will be a feature of the celebration of the Fourth of July in Cadillac this year.

The celebration will be sponsored by the American Legion, but the pageant is being arranged by a coalition committee including representatives of all civic and patriotic organizations.

The idea of the pageant originated with Postmaster Perry F. Powers, who is the author of a volume of history on northern Michigan. He is a pioneer newspaperman of this region and well acquainted with the legends and lore of the district.

Cadillac has a wealth of material for a pageant depicting the evolution of the city from a tract of timber to a community of industry and wealth. The origin of the name of the city will furnish an opportunity for the symbolical presentation of incidents in the early history of the state. Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac, the famous French explorer, for whom the city was named, is closely identified with the settlement of the straits region and the city of Detroit. His activities will be pictured with fidelity to actual historical incidents.

The life of the Indians of the early days and their relations with the first settlers will be portrayed, as well as the great lumbering industry on which the original prosperity of the section was built.

There is planned a series of pantomimes depicting all the operations of the woods, closely paralleling the actual scenes of yesterday.

The origin of the Swedish colony will be pictured with many of the original participants taking roles in the reproduction of a migration that established a large Scandinavian colony in Cadillac.

Many of the original buildings will be reproduced either in miniature or on scenic canvas.

The pageant will be produced by 100 characters for three consecutive evenings.

Crystal Lake Camp Site
For Illinois Scouts

Another boys' camp has been located near Fremont, the DuPage, Ill., council of Boy Scouts having purchased a tract of 50 acres located on the south side of Crystal lake from Oren Mayo. The property is a beautiful wooded spot with about 600 feet of shore line.

John F. Conley, scout executive of the council, which includes organizations in six communities in that county, states his organization plans on building 12 cabins and a dining hall this year. The camp will be added to each season until the maximum facilities are obtained.

This is the second boys' camp to locate near here in the past three years. Camp Echo, the camp of the Evanston, Ill., Y. M. C. A., is located on Long lake, a short distance from the new location.

New Home for
Olivet Freshmen

Moving day for freshmen of Olivet college. They have gathered their goods and chattels from private homes and moved into the new dormitory for men.

The new dormitory is of modern construction with up-to-date equipment and furnishings. It will house about 100 men. In it are guest rooms, infirmary, baths and showers on each of the three floors besides a large club room on the first floor. All freshmen are to room in the dormitory by decree of the college.

Formal dedication will be held during the June commencement.

Poems That Live

THE RONDEAU
You bid me try, Blue Eyes, to write
A Rondeau. What! Forthwith?—To-night?
Reflect. Some skill I have, 'tis true;
But thirteen lines!—and rhymed on two!—
"Refrain," as well. Ah, hapless plight!

Still, there are five lines—ranged aright
These Gallic bonds, I feared, would fright
My easy Muse. They did till you—
You bid me try!

That makes them eight. The port's in sight:
'Tis all because your eyes are bright!
Now just a pair to end in "oo,"
When maids command, what can't we do!
Behold!—the Rondeau, tasteful, light,
You bid me try!
—After the French of Voiture by Austin Dobson (1840-1921)

Mirrors Reflect Taste

By HILDA HUNT

From living room to kitchen, the mirror invades every part of the home. Not on the walls only are mirrors the fashion of the moment in interior decorating. They are used as tops to tables and dressers and for tiers of tiny corner shelves for the bath room. Of course one does not want too many mirrors in one room, but a mirror in every room is a great convenience, to say the least. It has its place in the scheme of interior decorating because it possesses both beauty and usefulness. As the interior decorator will tell you, a thing must be useful to be beautiful and beautiful to be useful. Otherwise it should be eliminated. We are even coloring the pots and pans in the kitchen to make them more presentable to our sense of the artistic.

The framed mirror is by no means out. It all depends upon the type of room—whether it is furnished in truly modern style or with early American or period furniture. The modern room usually calls for the unframed mirror flat against the wall, or flat on the table. The period or early American room calls for the framed mirror, although there are exceptions to both rules.

The oval mirror in the center of the sketch is especially adaptable to the draped dresser with a mirror top. With it should be used either small glass tree or flowering plant ornaments, or glass boudoir lamps with mirror bases with silk shades to match the color of the drape. This mirror is fastened flat against the wall with small inconspicuous glass top screws.

Modernistic Shape

If one prefers the more modernistic shaped mirror, that at the upper right will better suit the taste. Here the screws which fasten it to the wall are headed with small glass flowers. Either of these mirrors would also add charm to the living room or hall over the console table.

Two framed hall mirrors are shown at the upper left and lower right. These are suitable where the furniture is of period or early American type. That at the upper left would go best with period furniture, while that at the lower right would look best with the early American type. Both are framed in wood. Fruit wood is used for the frame on the first and mahogany for that on the second.

The mirror shown at the lower center was designed for a sideboard. It is practical for the long sideboard that has no back, and would go well with either early American or period furniture, or even in the more modern room where the furniture was not too strictly modernistic. A plainer frame, or no frame at all, would be better in the modernistic room, as in this type of furnishing no ornamentation at all is used.

To Resume Study of German in St. Joseph

Study of the German language will be resumed in public schools of St. Joseph with opening of the next term, after more than a decade during which this tongue has been on the "black list."

Instruction in German was discontinued during the World war. Talk of reinstating it on the modern language curriculum has been heard for the past few years.

Life-Saving Medals
Are Presented to 17 Resuscitators

That special training in the saving of human life will earn its own reward is remarkably proved by the recent awards of the President's Medal of the National Safety Council for successful resuscitation.

A splendid example was the saving on Aug. 20, 1928, of the life of little Sallie Lou Arold, aged 2, of 817 Ferris Court, Kalamazoo, Mich., by Leo A. Hartzell, who is an electric light company inspector living at Vicksburg, West Lake, Mich. The child had disappeared and had been found in a lake, apparently drowned. But Hartzell, through 45 minutes of prone-pressure first aid work, in which he was skilled through company training, was able to revive her. About a year previously he had saved another life in similar manner.

Following are additional awards made:

Harry Fauroat, 57 Kearney Ave., Kearney, N. J., for resuscitating Thomas Leddy, 65 1/2 Passaic St., Newark, N. J., on Nov. 2, 1928, from electric shock.

C. L. Quinn, 323 N. Mulberry St., Muncie, Ind., an electric company line foreman, for resuscitating Ray Lane, 203 Calvert St., Muncie, Ind., from electric shock.

Delbert Russell, Pineville, Ky., for resuscitating on Aug. 14, 1928, Freeman, Lamb, Pineville, Ky., electric shock.

Fred J. Lockwood, 113-15 199 St., Hollis, Long Island, N. Y., on Dec. 7, 1928, for resuscitating Mrs. C. Kind, 117-15 199 St., Hollis, Long Island, from gas, after 45 minutes of prone-pressure work.

Harry Stevenson, Greenwood, Ind., on May 22, 1928, for resuscitating Richard Hood, 526 S. Alabama St., Indianapolis, Ind., electric shock.

A. Lovern, El Dorado, Kan., on Dec. 10, 1928, for resuscitating William H. Fankhouser, El Dorado, Kan., electric shock.

Charles Harvey Wood, 1116 King St., Wilmington, Del., on Aug. 29, 1928, trained in first aid with the local telephone company, was passing in his automobile, and stopped to resuscitate Raymond Mills, 622 E. Third St., Wilmington, Del., from gas inhalation.

Raymond Lee Carey, 22 Sixth Ave., Wilmington, Del., on July 1, 1928, also trained by the telephone company, resuscitated Ralph Hutchinson, 24 Sixth Ave., Wilmington, from gas asphyxiation.

Bachelor Degree
Given 90 at Hope

Nearly 90 students of Hope college's 1929 class will receive the Bachelor of Arts degree at the annual commencement in June. The membership of the class represents 10 states, while the Michigan students are from 11 different cities and villages.

Among the seniors in the college is Miss Margaret Wilhelmina Otte, daughter of Mrs. John Otte. Mrs. Otte was one of the first two women to be graduated from the college, having obtained her degree in 1882. Miss Otte's grandfather, Rev. Philip Phelps, was Hope's first president. His term of office was from 1866 to 1868. Mrs. Otte's husband died several years ago while engaged in medical mission work in China.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

MENU HINT
Spanish Steak Browned Potatoes
Creamed Asparagus
Lettuce and Watercress
Halved Grapefruits Coffee
The dinner menu is fairly heavy, so I have given you a light fruit dessert. The grapefruit may either be served in the shells as suggested, simply halved and the pulp loosened and sweetened to taste, or it may be taken out of the shell and served with orange sections in Sherbet cups. Bananas may also be added.

Today's Recipes

Spanish Steak—Have one and one-half pounds round steak cut one inch thick. Dust with salt, pepper and flour. Fry until brown on both sides in a little fat. Add one sliced onion, one green pepper and one large tomato, fresh or canned. Continue frying until vegetables are partly cooked. cover with boiling water and allow to simmer about two hours until tender. Thicken gravy and serve.

SUGGESTIONS
Paint the Rug

If you have a carpet or rug that is badly faded why not give it a new color?

Either use a very thin paint or dissolve a dye in cold water and add a little acetic acid to make the color fast, then apply it all over the carpet with a brush. Let dry for about a week, then give it another coat. Both coats should be thin so the paint will not soak through.

Faded Wiltons, velvets and Brussels carpets turned face down, then cleaned, painted (on wrong side) and varnished will look well and give long service.

A few drops of ammonia added to the water when washing pantry shelves will help to keep ants away, and a few drops sprinkled in the cupboard will keep moths away.

Sike Prof. I am dismissing you ten minutes earlier. Try not to wake the other class."

The World and All
By CHARLES B. DRISCOLL

IN NEW YORK

This is a typical story of the market. A friend of mine is a dealer in rare books. He was a salesman in a book store until a year ago, when he managed to borrow enough money to set up for himself.

He made money slowly, and put it back into the business, paying off loans. He has acquired a nice stock of books, but $3,500 was all the money he could actually call his own.

Three months ago he said to me, "I'm not going to buy stocks in this Hoover market until prices recede. When the shake-out comes, I'm going in with every cent I have, and I'm going to buy on the most liberal margin I can get. Then, when prices start soaring, watch me make my fortune!"

He waited until there was a sharp recession. One day I found him nervous, but happy.

"I've staked my wad," he said, "Every cent I had I put into the market today, on five good stocks. I put up only about 25 per cent of the price of the stocks, and I stand to make $30,000 in the next two months."

A week later he borrowed a few hundred dollars at his bank, and staked that, too.

The day of the big crash I met him late in the afternoon.

"I'm wiped out," he said. He hadn't shaved all day. He hadn't slept the preceding night.

"This afternoon," he said, "I tried to save enough of my stock to give me a boost up when the tide turns, but they slipped too fast for me. I borrowed two thousand and put it up as margin. It was wiped out in 15 minutes. When the market closed I hadn't a stock or a cent left."

This man had his business left when the market closed. Since it was practically all based on borrowed money anyway, he didn't lose it. But he was one of the little fellows who lost all his savings and somewhat more besides.

I spent hours feeling sorry for my friend, who is an excellent fellow and an honest man. Then I began to hear of those who had lost their business stakes along with their savings, and of those who had lost in their old age, and of school teachers and typists who had been wiped out. And I had hardly the nerve to be sorry for my friend any more, in the face of these more pathetic wrecks.

I was reminded of the aftermath of a tornado in a western town I once inhabited. There was that same strain upon sympathy by the constant outcropping of instances worse than the preceding ones.

How to Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

CHESTNUT, BROWN AND BLACK
By Madame Rubinstein

The darker-haired women of the world have a fortunate gift in common—their hair is usually thicker and stronger than that of their blonde-haired sisters.

But dark hair—like blonde—requires painstaking care to keep it soft, shining and healthy. Where blondes are inclined to "fuss" with their hair to keep it light in color and fluffy, the brunette is more inclined to neglect hers. For this reason dark hair is less likely to be noticed for its color and beauty than the blonde.

Too often we hear a brunette's hair spoken of merely as "dark." In reality, there are numerous shades of dark hair, ranging from the very warm chestnut through the medium brown tones to dark brown and black. Each shade has its own lovely lights and tints, which proper care will bring out and emphasize.

Hot oil shampoos may be used by the brunette to good advantage, especially if her scalp is inclined to be dry and her hair brittle, with a tendency to split at the ends. Even for oily scalps the hot oil shampoo is often recommended since some oily conditions indicate, not a well-nourished scalp, but a lax state of activity in the oil glands. Treatment with hot oil will feed the scalp and ward off the fading and graying that comes to dark hair oftentimes early in life.

A good, stimulating tonic and massage may be used as a part of the oil haired brunettes' treatment, the tonic to be used varying with the color of the hair.

To bring out the reddish lights and tints lingering in all brown hair, nothing is better than a henna rinse. Henna is an herb and is considered good for the hair and scalp.

All dark hair should be well brushed frequently to keep it glossy and to keep the scalp healthily stimulated. Black hair, especially, must be brushed often to remove the particles of dandruff and dust which so often cling to it, marring its shining darkness with a gray, cloudy look. Black hair, to be beautiful, must be perfectly clean, always. Usually it is more becoming worn straight than curled, and since it depends for its charm on its shining perfection and good grooming, nothing should be allowed to interfere with the care which will keep it always at its best.

If you are a dark-haired lady, remember that your hair is not just DARK. It is one of several attractive colors, and it is up to you to see that people will remember you as having hair with chestnut, auburn or ruddy-brown tints. Unless your hair is really black, when its own shade is distinctive enough, and all that is necessary for you to do is to keep it perfectly groomed and healthy.

With the Women of Today

By Lillian Campbell

Just how important the spirit of America and American training is becoming in the world of music may be suggested by the performance of Countess Olga Madalago-Albani, a lyric soprano, who was guest artist in a recent nationally broadcast radio program.

Daughter of one of the oldest families of Spain, her grandfather one of its famous admirals, and married to the son of an equally historic European family, Countess Albani has lived in America since she was 3 years old. She was educated in a Long Island convent and the Horace Mann school of New York City, and received practically all of her musical training on Manhattan Island.

Young, vivacious, a typical daughter of Spain in appearance, and an independent, up-and-doing type of American girl in spirit, she is rapidly winning recognition as one of the foremost interpreters of Spanish and Latin American folk song, ballads and lyric poetry.

To take care of her varied interests, the president's wife, Mrs. Herbert Hoover, employs two secretaries, Miss

Countess Olga Madalago-Albani

Ruth Fessler and Miss Mildred Hall, one of whom accompanies her on all trips.

Detroit Armories Asked

The state legislature has been asked to appropriate $1,850,000 for the construction of five new armories in Detroit for the National Guard and the Naval Reserve units. According to Col. Walter C. Cole, of Detroit, at least four Detroit militia units will be homeless within a year unless the state acts to provide housing for them. The appropriations asked include $350,000 in 1930 for a new Naval Reserve armory, $300,000 in 1930 and $240,000 in 1931 for a home for the 182nd Field Artillery; $180,000 in 1930 for an armory for the 106th Cavalry; $180,000 for the 107th Observation Squadron armory in 1931 and $600,000 in 1931 for a new building to replace the present Detroit armory.

Long trips are easy when you drive a Ford

Easy-Riding comfort is one of the features of the new Ford. Somehow it seems to just glide along, as if every road were a good road. Even rough stretches may be taken at a fast pace without hard jolts or bumps or the exaggerated bouncing rebound which is the cause of most motoring fatigue.

Are you willing to "take a chance" and use doubtful seed? There are more fakes in the seed business than in most any line of business. You can't tell by "looks" and you can't tell by analysis tags.
