My Ouija Board

By Arthur Nash

You can talk about your spiritualist seances and such; Gypsy fortune telling women Don't interest me much. But since I got my Ouija Board I'm as happy as can be, It tells me all I want to know About things I'd like to see. It answers all the questions I ask, from "A" to "Z". Its accuracy is thrilling, Its a constant jubilee. So when I want to know a thing I try to think the best; I place my fingers on the board, Old Ouija does the rest.

Distinctive Belongings

The expression "lares and penates" is used collectively to denote the personal and individual belongings in a home which make it distinctively one's home. In ancient Rome the lares were the household gods, usually deified ancestors or heroes; the penates were also guardian deities of the household and the state, but were more in the nature of personifications of natural powers, their duty being to bring wealth and plenty rather than to ward off danger.

First Session of Congress

On Wednesday, March 4, 1789, some of the members of each house of congress appeared and took their seats. A quorum was not present in either house, so both adjourned. They met and adjourned from day to day until April 1, upon which day a quorum was present in the house of representatives, whereupon it was organized. Upon April 6 a quorum was present in the senate, and its official business was begun.

Scientists Baffled by Sound of Singing Sands

There are many points in this country and abroad where the sands of the seashore are said to make a sound and this is attributed to the disturbance of the particles by the wind, but the singing sands of the Arabian desert is a phenomenon which has attracted attention for a thousand years and without any really satisfactory explanation. Here there is no disturbance by the wind and yet there is plainly a noise at times which is variously described. It is a cross between a low moan and the reverberations of a deep-toned bell after the hammer's blow. The natives regard it as something supernatural. Dunes in many parts of the world have become known less for the legends connected with them than for the peculiarly characteristic sounds. Sonorous dunes at the extreme end of lower California have been responsible for a Mexican legend of a monastery buried under the shifting sands. Daily at Angelus time the natives listen for the faint resonance of its bells. In South Africa there are laughing sands, and near the end of the last century a mining engineer discovered rumbling sands in Chile, South America. Moaning sands have been found in the western Sahara, between Timbuctoo and Morocco, and musical dunes in the Libyan desert of Africa. Kaula, one of the group of the Hawaiian islands, is famed for its barking sands.

MICHIGAN WINS
4 BIG 10 TITLES
IN PAST YEAR

Athletic records of the University of Michigan were enriched during 1931 by three undisputed Western Conference championships, a tie for another, and one national title. The Wolverines won 79 dual contests, lost 33 and tied six for a percentage of .705.

The outstanding team to represent Michigan during the year was Coach Matt Mann's group of swimming stars who went undefeated in Intercollegiate competition. The swimmers won their dual meet by lopsided scores and brought home the undisputed Western Conference and National Intercollegiate championships for 1931.

Other clear titles were won by the hockey and indoor track teams, and the football team tied with Purdue and Northwestern for the championship of the Western Conference. Second places in the Big Ten were taken by the basketball, golf and wrestling team. The outdoor track, cross-country and fencing teams finished in third place, the basketball team for fourth, and the gymnastic team finished fifth in the conference; the tennis team won four and lost one conference dual meet.

demonstrated its invincibility in November by holding opponents scoreless in the last six games after dropping an early game to Ohio State University. The Wolverines have not been defeated in November games since 1927.

The reserve fund and undivided profits accounts show an increase of $1,691,442.74 over the 1930 report. There were no failures in 1931.

MICHIGAN VILLAGES
REDUCE TAXES 1931

Of 149 reporting, 101 Michigan villages reduced their 1931 taxes as against 1930, according to a compilation recently completed by the Michigan Municipal League and now being prepared for distribution.

Tax reductions in 55 of the 101 villages exceeded 10 per cent; 47 of these 55 made reductions exceeding 15 per cent; 29 exceeded 20 per cent; 12 exceeded 30 per cent, and 3 exceeded 50 per cent. Most of the villages which did not show tax reductions either made the same levy or increased small amounts with the exception of a few which were forced to increase to cover heavy debt charges.

The tabulation includes 1929 taxes, as well as 1930 and 1931, indicating that during the year from 1929 to 1930 just 75 of the 149 reduced tax revenues. Forty villages of the 75 made reductions of more than 10 per cent in that year, and a somewhat larger proportion of the reductions were in the higher brackets, compared with 1931 reductions.

The data shows that 81 of the 149 villages reduced assessments in 1930 under those of 1929, and in 1931 reductions were made by 108 of the villages.

Besides the information on tax revenues and assessed valuations for the three years, the compilation also includes the per capita cost of government in the municipalities reporting. The total tax levy of the 149 villages in 1931 is $3,000,910, of which 22 of the larger villages levied approximately $2,000,000 or nearly two-thirds of the total.

In discussing the information in the bulletin, Director Harold D. Smith of the Municipal League, calls attention to the fact that in the absence of uniform methods of accounting and reporting variations may exist in the information, yet the analysis indicates a definite downward trend in village taxes in response to demands for tax reduction.

Suit Against Mason
Publisher Dismissed

Judge Leland W. Carr has filed a decree with the county clerk dismissing the case against Vernon J. Brown, state representative, and his son, Nelson D. Brown, asking for an accounting of school funds. The action was brought by Dr. Sidney H. Culver, who claimed that the Browns, acting as partners in the Ingham County News, could not legally collect for printing for local schools during the time Vernon J. Brown was president of the board of education.

In his decision, Judge Carr held that the school board had received the supplies and printing, that there was no question as to the value of the articles received by the board, so there was no reason for an accounting. The court held no loss to the school board resulted and that the payments had been made openly and in good faith.

Meat Cheaper Than
In 1875, Old Allegan
Window Sign Shows

The Brand market, Allegan, has on display an old placard which reads: "Take Notice: 'We, the undersigned butchers of Allegan, agree to sell meats at the following prices: Steaks and chops, 15 cents per pound; roasts, 12 cents per pound. Allegan, May 20, 1875. Lotts & Martin, J. Lester, T. and B. Calkins & Co.

The old placard recently was found between a partition in the old Orrin Hesselton home near the fair grounds, while the house was undergoing repairs. Meats are cheaper now than at that time.

Albert Brand acquired the market in 1885 and a year later H. C. Maentz became a partner and after eight years established the Maentz market which now is operated by his son, Henry O. Maentz.

Receiver Awarded
Heavy Judgment

By a decree of Federal Judge Fred M. Raymond's court, Grand Rapids, the United Light & Power Co. of New York is ordered to pay the Grand Rapids Trust Co. as receiver for the Grand Rapids, Grand Haven & Muskegon Railway Co., defunct, the sum of $322,007.89 within 30 days with interest at 5 per cent from Dec. 1. The decree grows out of a suit now five years old and follows upon an opinion given by Judge Raymond last August.

The defendant concern was the holding company for the Muskegon interurban. The judgment embodies $102,000 in dividends ordered restored; around $85,000 in management and engineering fees and contract fees of $22,000, a total of $218,531.70, to which was added interest of $103,476.19. Costs also are assessed against the defendant. If the judgment is not paid in 30 days the court ordered an execution against defendant's property should issue.

Copyright Owners
Of Songs File Suit

Two damage suits for alleged violation of copy right on sheet music were filed recently in the federal court here. Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers; Shapiro, Bernstein, Inc., and Leo Feist, Inc., sheet music publishers, are plaintiffs in the suits. Herman Knickerbocker, proprietor of Knickerbocker Gardens, Flint, amusement place, is named defendant in one suit, and Carl Townsend, proprietor of Old Inn, Mt. Morris, is named in the other. Both are alleged to have used for amusement purposes songs upon which copyrights were held by the plaintiffs.

LICENSE MONEY NOW
SPENT FOR REFUGES

"For the exclusive purpose of acquisition, protection, development and maintenance of game refuges and public hunting grounds $1.50 of the fee received from the sale of each deer hunter's license shall be made available." This clause was added to the general game bill by the legislature of 1931.

While the exact amount of the fund thus created cannot be stated until all deed license sales for the past season are reported it is indicated at about $100,000. In the opinion of the conservation commission about 50 per cent of this amount will be required to protect, develop and maintain existing game refuges and public hunting grounds this year. The balance is being spent for additional acreage.

The essential objective at this time, according to game and land utilization authorities, is to block solid the state's present game refuge and public hunting ground holdings. This is being accomplished by the three means available to the conservation department: The use of lands reverting to the state in the desired areas, the exchange of tax-delinquent lands outside of established land projects for acreage within the projects and by direct purchase.

The conservation commission in December authorized the purchase of 240 acres within the Cusino Game refuge at a cost of $1,200 and also sanctioned an acre for acre exchange the state received 3,000 acres within with the Ford Motor Co., whereby the Cusino public hunting ground area for 3,000 acres of unorganized state holdings in eastern Mackinac county.

Muskegon Plant Sold

Confirmation of the sale of the record division of the Brunswick Radio Corporation, at Muskegon, to the American Record Company, a subsidiary of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., has been given. No decision as to what will be done with the radio division as yet has been announced, although production has been discontinued at least until spring.

State Agrees to Purchase
Of Dubious Macomb Bonds

The state administration, in an effort to provide financial relief for Macomb county, has offered to buy $350,000 of Macomb refunding bonds, which cannot be sold on the open market and which B. V. Nunneley, Mt. Clemens city attorney, admits are of doubtful value. In agreeing to buy the bonds, the state stipulates that it will not take bonds used to refinance county drains, because some of these drain bonds are believed to be invalid; and secondly, that no bonding house shall receive a commission on the sale.

Regarding the proposed issue, Mr. Nunneley says: "If it was for a matter of investment, I cannot conceive of anyone buying this issue." The new issue, which involves $712,000, is necessary to continue welfare work and pay up bills totaling $120,000 owed to Mr. Clemens merchants, as well as to reimburse the county's general fund for taking over Covert road and drain district bonds which were about to be defaulted.

If the State's two provisos are met, the bonds will be purchased by the state for sinking funds being built up to retire the state's highway and soldiers' bonus issues. Although Howard C. Lawrence, state treasurer, has wide discretion in the purchase of bonds for these funds, the law requires him to invest the money in sound securities. Commenting on the state's proposal, Mr. Lawrence said: "We have refused in the past to purchase Macomb bonds for our sinking fund. I felt that these bonds do not qualify as sound investments. I am making this concession now, not because the status of Macomb county's securities has improved, but because the governor desires that the county should receive aid. The fact that the money is to be used for welfare purposes has influenced my decision."

It is said that the county has contracted with a Toledo firm to dispose of the total issue for a commission of three per cent. Governor Brucker demands that this commission should not be paid, inasmuch as the money is needed for welfare work. Detroit banks have consented to purchase $200,000 worth of the issue, officials said.

Don't Want Lumber-Day
Locomotive In Building

Several substitutes for the building being built in Clinch park to house the old David H. Day locomotive have been offered by Traverse business men who want to see some other arrangement made for the display of the relic of logging days.

Some object to the building because it shuts off one corner of the view of Grand Traverse bay from Cass-st. Others believe the locomotive should be where it could be more plainly seen from Front-st. and thus attract more persons to Clinch park.

"The old engine was made for outdoor use and that's where it spent most of its life," one business man said recently. "A little paint now and then would keep it in good condition and then it could be seen and would arouse the curiosity of many people who would not otherwise visit the park."

The matter is in the hands of the park commission.

SPORTSMEN TO PROFIT IN STATE
LAND DEAL

State land affairs acted upon by the Conservation Commission at the regular monthly meeting in December were of large interest to sportsmen, recreationists, and to several of the northern counties; outstanding among these were the following transactions:

Two hundred and forty acres within the Cusina Game Refuge and Public Hunting Ground area will be purchased at a cost of $1,200.00.

Fifteen hundred acres of scattered state lands in the upper peninsula will be exchanged for lands having a large frontage on Indian Lake in Schoolcraft county. The acreage acquired will be used for recreational purposes.

Three thousand acres of state lands outside organized state projects and located in the eastern part of Mackinaw county will be exchanged with the Ford Motor Company for an equal amount within the public hunting ground area of the Cusina Game Refuge unit.

A large acreage of tax-delinquent lands located in Montmorency county which had been withheld from sale upon the request of the Conservation Department, was released from this classification upon the request of the previous owner, who now wishes to regain title by payment of approximately $25,000.00 in back taxes.

Old Stone Tablet
Dug Up At Jackson

What is believed to be an ancient Indian message tablet was dug up recently by Fred Randolph, manager of the Jackson county fair, while he was excavating along the banks of the Grand river on his farm in Rives township. The stone tablet, about 16 inches long and eight inches wide, is carved with likenesses of fish, alligators, birds and turtles and apparently had been buried in the river bank for a long period. Randolph will send his find to the archaeologists at the University of Michigan for their consideration.

bowel trouble

Constipation may very easily become chronic after forty. And any continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles and a host of other unpleasant disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. Whenever they need any help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, or when your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

Lost! 18 lbs. of FAT in 15 Days!

Well Known Saginaw Woman Jubilant—Reduced Hips Three and a Half Inches—Reduced Bust Four Inches—Feels, Oh, So Light and Full of Pep!

Suppose you weighed 186 pounds and every time you looked in a mirror tears came into your eyes as you gazed on a huge double chin, heavy arms and legs, large hips and bust. And suppose this over-fat condition made you too heavy for your own feet—until you felt constantly all dragged out, stomach upset with gas and indigestion, and terrific headaches. And then you tried one thing after another—and you're all ready to give up in despair.

Such was the dilemma of Mrs. Frank Cole, 602 N. Jefferson Ave., Saginaw, Mich. She read about Bonkora, the one safe, natural way to take off excess pounds by cleansing wastes from the intestines and removing retained moisture from fatty tissues. But let her tell the story:

"I am so grateful for what Bonkora has done for me that I almost want to shout it from the housetops. I weighed 186 lbs. After taking just 3 bottles of your wonderful medicine, I am down to 168. I have had to take in all my dresses, for I have lost 4 inches in the bust and 3½ in the hips. And I am feeling better than I have for years. I couldn't digest a thing. I used to suffer from gas in the stomach; constant dizzy spells and from such terrible headaches that at times I could hardly see. I slept poorly. I felt tired all the time and could scarcely do my work. Now all that is gone. I seem to be able to eat anything I like without distress. I sleep well every night and get up feeling fine. I can now work hard all day and never feel tired. I look so well, my friends ask me what on earth I have done to myself. And I tell them, I owe it all to Bonkora."

You may not lose 18 pounds in 15 days. But if you have excess fat you can lose it in the famous "3 easy stages" as shown in this picture. For the next week, before meals, take a little Bonkora, the new Battle Creek treatment, in half a glass of water. No need to starve. Eat as much as you wish. The big secret is selecting for each meal the proper combination of foods that do not clog the system and turn to fat. An almost endless choice of appetizing, delicious, healthy foods that do not clog the system and turn to fat. An almost endless choice of appetizing, delicious, healthy foods that do not clog the system and turn to fat. An almost endless choice of appetizing, delicious, healthy foods that do not clog the system and turn to fat.

Simply purchase a bottle of Bonkora, the new Battle Creek treatment, at your druggist's today—unhealthy fat will quickly disappear and with it bloated, gas, and other stomach ills. You'll feel younger; yes, you'll look younger with those bright eyes and that clear skin and stanning figure which only perfect health can impart.

INCREASE OF 27 PER CENT SHOWN IN PIGS

An increase of 27 per cent in the number of pigs saved this fall as compared with a year ago is shown by reports from more than 2500 Michigan hog raisers, collected on December 1 by the Department of Agriculture, with the co-operation of the postmasters and rural carriers of the state. This is the largest percentage increase ever recorded for the fall pig crop in Michigan during the ten years for which similar records are available.

An even larger increase in next spring's pig crop is also indicated by the report. The number of sows bred for farrowing during the next six months was reported to be 31 per cent more than the number that farrowed last spring. Allowing for the fact that breeding intentions usually exceed actual farrowing by about 11 per cent, this indicates that the number of sows to farrow next spring will probably show an increase of 20 per cent over a year ago. This sharp expansion in Michigan's hog industry may be attributed to the fact that the Michigan corn crop of 1931 was more than 60 per cent larger than the record low crops of the past two years. Furthermore, the relative process of corn and hogs during the past year has been more favorable to the Michigan hog raiser, than any time since 1927.

Combining the indication on pigs saved from the present survey with that from the June survey last spring shows that the total 1931 pig crop here in Michigan was about 14 per cent greater than for 1930. If marketings bear the same relationship to the reported change in size of pig crop as they have during the past nine years, shipments from Michigan during the twelve month period, September 1931-August 1932, should be about 17 per cent greater than for the corresponding months in 1930-31.

Alfalfa Seed Crop Is 15 Pct. Smaller

Alfalfa seed production is expected to be about 15 per cent smaller than last year. The United States bureau of agricultural economics estimates production at about 45,500,000 pounds of country-run seed compared with 53,500,000 pounds last year.

Acreage saved for seed in the country as a whole was somewhat smaller than last year. Yield per acre varied widely in the different districts, but for the country as a whole the average was only slightly below that of a year ago.

Growers indicated the greatest losses were caused by the attacks of grasshoppers and the prevalence of drought. Damage in a lesser degree was likewise done by such insect pests as chalcids fly, army worms and web worms. Hot winds and lack of irrigation water cut down the crop in a few districts.

Weather and labor conditions for harvesting the crop were unusually favorable. The quality was expected to be about the same as that of a year ago. Prices to growers are much below a year ago.

Imports were unusually small and for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, amounting to 233,400 pounds compared with 337,000 in 1930, 1,146,400 in 1929, 782,300 in 1928 and about 4,775,200 pounds, the average for the past 20 years. The greater part of the alfalfa imported during the fiscal year came from Canada. The crop there is expected to be slightly larger than last year. Likewise in Europe larger crops are looked for in Hungary and Italy.

A larger crop was expected in Michigan.

To Continue Work Of Fish Research

The work of scientific fish investigation, under a co-operative plan of research at the University of Michigan, done by the institute of fish with the state conservation department, will be continued on a reduced scale under an appropriation from the game protection fund, Director of Conservation George Hagarth announced recently.

The question of financing this work, which is in charge of Dr. Carl Hubbs of the university, was discussed at the December meeting of the conservation commission. At that time fear was expressed that the work would have to be sharply curtailed or dropped altogether because of lack of funds. The game fund is facing a deficit of $100,000, owing to the reduced sale of hunting licenses this year and the work of the conservation department is to be cut accordingly.

About $6,000 has been spent from the game fund in scientific fish work so far this year and more money was needed at once if this work, believed by sportsmen to be vital to the conservation department's fish program was to be continued.

It was decided to appropriate $6,250 from the game fund to allow Dr. Hubbs to continue. This will not permit an extensive program of scientific fish work but will at least enable the program to go forward on a reduced scale.

State's Wheat, Rye Crops Doing Well

A warm fall and timely rains contributed to the best condition at this time of year for the winter wheat and rye crops of this state in several years.

The state crop reporting service placed the condition of wheat at 94 per cent, the best since 1927. The average for the 10-year period from 1920-29 was 88 per cent. Rye was 10 points above the condition at this time last year at 91 per cent and 2 points better than the 10-year average.

Michigan farmers have reduced their wheat acreage about 2 per cent under last year with an estimated planting of 698,000 acres, the smallest acreage in four years. The rye estimate is 169,000 acres, or 5 per cent more than the 161,000 acres sown last fall.

The Michigan plantings compare with a 10.4 decrease in the winter wheat acreage for the nation and a reduction of 7 per cent in the rye plantings.

Cross Wild Plants With Domestic to Obtain Hardiness

"Back to the wild" is a motto often observed by plant breeders of small fruits in the United States department of agriculture. They have found that crossing established domestic varieties with some of the foreign and native wild types often gives the resultant progeny certain hardy characteristics, which make it resistant to many of the common plant diseases.

Breeding among such fruits as strawberries, raspberries and the smaller fruits has become an important branch of the work of the department and many investigations in small fruit breeding are under way, in co-operation with state experiment stations.

Many foreign plants are brought to America for this work and although many of these are not good varieties in themselves they often have desirable characteristics. When they are crossed with other plants they frequently transmit these characteristics. Red raspberries brought from China and other wild imported fruits are being used for breeding work with some of the well-known American varieties.

Sudan Grass Yields Big Crop of Forage

Yields of three tons of hay per acre and good pasture following the cutting of hay until the plants were injured by frost were secured from the seedlings of Sudan grass made this year by Michigan State College.

Sudan grass hay is not equal in value to alfalfa or clover hay but it has the same amount of digestible protein as timothy hay and contains more carbohydrates and total digestible nutrients. The grass can be seeded in late May or June and is ready to cut for hay in August.

The system of Sudan grass are rather coarse and dry somewhat slowly. Several methods of curing the hay were tried by the college to determine which way would be best under Michigan conditions.

Part of the hay was cured in the swath, part was raked and cured in the windrow, and part was cured in cocks. The portion cured in the swath was put up without any rain damage but the hay was bleached more than that cured by the other two methods.

The best method of curing, apparently, is to leave the hay in the swath for one or two days and then rake it into a two-swath windrow with a side delivery rake. The hay can be raked immediately after cutting and the windrow turned once while it is curing but this involves the extra labor of turning the hay once.

When pasturing Sudan grass stock must be removed before the grass is injured by frost, because a poisonous substance develops in the plant after it has been frosted.

Hamilton Celery Harvest Is Small

Hamilton, famous for its fine celery, did not have as large a crop as usual this year, as much of the harvest was spoiled by the unusual warm weather. Most of the growers have finished shipping from that point.

Hamilton's "Brittle Brand" is listed among the best celery grown in the state. Allegan county is becoming famous for its fine quality of celery. The celebrated celery transplanter manufactured at Hamilton has enabled growers to enlarge their celery fields and has proved a money and a labor saver.

Eaton Ranks Sixth In State Wheat Belt

Eaton county ranks sixth in the state as a wheat producing area, according to statistics obtained by Hans Kardel, county agricultural agent. It is estimated 563,000 bushels of wheat were raised in the county. Clinton county was the high county with 659,000 bushels. A number of elevators in this county have complained about the high percentage of smut found in the wheat that has already been placed on the market.

POULTRY

BUYER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Where the dealer performs his part of the contract, as advertised and agreed to, it is then that the buyer's responsibility begins. He must understand there is risk he must assume just as in the case of anything else. He must understand that baby chicks are very delicate and require good care, proper housing and feeding, if they are to live and mature into healthy birds. He should also bear in mind that a large percentage of supposed cases of bacillary white diarrhea are just plain bowel trouble, caused from chilling over heating or improper feeding.

The dealer cannot well be held responsible for anything that happens to the chicks after being expressed or put in the mails for delivery, except that most dealers guarantee live delivery and to replace, without further charge, those which are missing or dead. Occasionally a dealer assumes, by previous agreement, greater responsibility than this, but in that case they usually get a higher price to cover losses.

The above are all matters that should be carefully understood between buyer and seller before order is given. If such understanding is definite, no disappointment need result.

SCIENCE BEATS NATURE REARING WILD GAME BIRDS

By taking Nature's methods and improving upon them through highly organized machinery controlled by scientific instruments, Edward E. Backus, superintendent of the Aver Game Farm of the department of conservation of Connecticut, will usher in the machine age of wild game breeding at the Eighteenth American Game Conference to be held in New York City, under the auspices of the American Game Association. Mr. Backus is considered one of the foremost authorities in game breeding through artificial methods. However, his address before the conference will be a composite of the experience of hundreds of game breeders throughout the United States, as well as that of his own.

Pheasants, an exotic bird being introduced rapidly throughout the country, will serve as his illustrating bird in the vast field of game breeding by the incubator brooder system. All data is to be made available to the public by the American Game Association.

Despite the tremendous success Mr. Backus and others have achieved, he declares in a preliminary statement that many problems in artificial propagation are yet to be solved.

"I do not mean to infer that the methods now in use are perfect," Mr. Backus said, "but the progress already made and the number of earnest men engaged in working out solutions to the problems confronting us, leads me to predict that in ten years the setting hen will be as absolute on the game farm as she is today on the modern poultry plant."

"The advantages of the incubator-brooder method over the field rearing method, particularly on those farms where game birds are reared in large numbers, are many. By making the breeder more or less independent of climatic and weather conditions, the incubator-brooder system greatly lengthens the season of production and renders it possible to produce birds successfully in localities where it would be impossible otherwise, his statement continues.

"By the incubator-brooder system the opportunity is offered of starting chicks a month or more earlier in the season than would be possible otherwise, resulting in more and better matured birds in the fall."

The great advantages of the artificial propagation methods will be given in detail by Mr. Backus at the conference.

Potato Yields Best When Planted Early

Field trials to determine how potatoes planted early enough to secure mature table stock compare in yield with late planted stock show that the early planted spuds outyielded those planted late, and the earlier ones also have much better cooking qualities, according to records secured by the farm crops department at Michigan State College this year.

Thirty nine growers in 20 counties cooperated with the College in making the plantings from which these records were secured. The dates of planting were May 15, June 1, and June 15.

The average yield for the May 15 plantings was 191 bushels which graded out 125 bushels of U. S. No. 1. The total yield for the June 1 plantings was 178 bushels with 121 bushels of No. 1; and the latest plantings yielded 154 bushels to the acre with 119 bushels of No. 1.

Cooking tests were made with specimens from all of the plantings and a decided difference in favor of the early stock was found. The mature potatoes from the May 15 plantings showed much less mechanical injuries from handling and grading than was found on the immature stock.

Freedom from injuries and good cooking qualities are two of the major factors that determine the salability of table stock potatoes.

WEEK OF JANUARY 17

The marked storm center which we predicted would hit Michigan at the end of last week will be in full swing at the beginning of the week of January 17th. Storms of rain, sleet or snow and high winds of more or less severe proportions will be heard from in many counties. Railroad trains will be late on their schedules, auto highways will be blocked and traffic generally will be delayed. The side roads, especially, will probably be badly drifted and as a result market conditions will be affected. Grain crops will be well protected.

This very active storm center will have passed over the state by the middle of the week bringing in somewhat colder weather and a day or so of more or less fair weather.

About Thursday or Friday temperatures will begin to rise somewhat in Michigan as a result of another low pressure area that will be covering the state. In some sections there will be fogs; in others, mists, and still others will have rain, snow or high winds. Some sections may have all these different effects of the weather.

These conditions will run over into the beginning of next week. Temperatures will be much colder at the beginning of the coming week and there is a probability readings will start downward the last thing of this week.

Michigan's 1932 Rye Harvest

Rye sown in Michigan this past fall is going into the new year 10 percent better than last year and two percent above the 10 year average. Michigan is one of three important rye producing states for the 1932 harvest that has sown a greater acreage than last year.

From the standpoint of the weather which we are expecting from now until next harvest we are of the opinion the rye harvest will be quite good in Michigan. It will not be the best yield this state is capable of producing, but we believe for the state as a whole the yield will repay for the work entailed.

Dinner Stories

And a Little Harder

A Swede was being examined in a Minnesota town where the defendant was accused of breaking a plate glass window with a large stone. He was pressed to tell how big the stone was, but he could not explain.

"Was it as big as my fist?" asked the nervous judge, who had taken the examination over from the lawyers in hope of getting some results.

"It ban bigger," the Swede replied.

"Was is as big as my two fists?"

"It ban bigger."

"Was it as big as my head?"

"It ban about as long, but not so tick," replied the Swede.

Scotch Joke

A Scot who was a bad sailor was crossing the channel. He went to the captain and asked him what he should do to prevent seasickness.

"Have you got a sixpence?" asked the captain.

"Ay," replied Sandy.

"Well, hold it between your teeth during the trip."

Repair, Recover, Retrieve

"Yes, ma'am, I repair and recover umbrellas."

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

A THRILLING MYSTERY STORY + by MILES BURTON

CHAPTER 1

Although the fog was so thick that from the pavement one could scarcely see the lights of the vehicles in the roadway, Mr. Thomas Herridge, known to his intimates as Pussy, hurried confidently on his way, avoiding collisions with a peculiar lithe dexterity. He crossed Oxford street, and was at once swallowed up in the deep yellow murk which filled the gaps between the houses like the depths of some turbid sea. Here, foot passengers were much less frequent, but, curiously enough, instead of quickening his pace, Mr. Herridge slackened it.

And yet, perhaps, this was natural enough. Even the most experienced Londoner might have been excused for losing his bearings. Once away from the railings which guarded the hide every glimmer of a lighted room. The window was that of a result of much careful study of the house. The time, and the fact that the drawing-room was apparently unlighted, made it practically certain that Lord and Lady Hardway were at dinner. Again Mr. Herridge smiled, and, with a preparatory gesture, rubbed his gloved hands against his thighs.

He stepped back a couple of paces, and suddenly leapt into the air, toward the stone wall of the house. For an instant his fingers sought frantically for some support, but failed to find it.

Without a sound he alighted once more upon the balcony. He moved a couple of feet farther to the left, and leapt again. This time his fingers found a ledge, and curled around it like steel clamps. With a swift move-cealed the case about his person. He relocked the safe, and left the room the way he had come, shutting the window behind him. His ingenious instrument was incapable of closing the hasp; this evidence of his entry he was forced to leave behind him. He reached the balcony, put on his boots and coat, and lowered himself to the pavement once more. Then, quietly and without hurry, he began to walk towards the corner of the Square.

He had been only just in time. The fog was beginning to lift, with that amazing rapidity which characterizes London fogs. Already it was appreciably thinner; the curb was visible from the railings, the lamps illuminated an ever-growing circle of mist. Mr. Herridge congratulated himself upon having chosen his moment so well. It did not matter to him now how soon the fog lifted. In fact, it would help him. There would be more people in the streets and it would be easier for him to pursue his way unobserved.

When he was about fifty yards from Lord Hardway's house he began unostentatiously to quicken his steps. A car was coming up behind him, moving scarcely faster than he was himself, its driver obviously guiding himself by the line of the curb. This was a nuisance. It was just possible that the driver might notice him sufficiently to give a rough description if questioned subsequently. The theft was pretty sure to be discovered before very long, and Mr. Herridge was not particularly anxious to be seen just then in Woodbridge Square. He noticed with satisfaction that the effect of quickening his steps was that the car did not gain upon him.

Having reached the corner of the Square, Mr. Herridge turned sharply into Deben street. And, as he did so, for the first time he felt a sudden sickening conviction that he was being followed. He could hear or see nothing, but his extraordinarily sharp perception told him that somewhere in the fog was another form, as silent as himself. He checked himself, and cowered back against the railings, trying to pierce the darkness. As he did so a dark shadow loomed suddenly in the circle of light cast by the lamp at the corner.

Mr. Herridge knew that his only chance of escaping observation lay in remaining motionless, and trusting to the shadow passing him by. But a sudden and unreasonable panic took possession of him. The shadow materialized into the figure of a man, his height and bulk magnified by the fog.

And when this menacing figure turned the corner and came straight towards him, Mr. Herridge lost his head and made a bolt for it down Deben street. But it was too late, a hand like iron fell upon his shoulder, almost knocking him to the ground. And as he staggered, his arms were seized, he was swung round like a bay, and a pair of handcuffs snapped over his wrists.

He was so dazed, that for a moment he could not speak, but stood there facing his captor, a bluff-faced burly man, who smiled at him sardonically. "Why, bless me, if it isn't Pussy!" he exclaimed. "Lost your way in the fog, haven't you, Pussy? This is Mayfair, not Wapping, you know."

Mr. Herridge made no reply. The man was a total stranger to him and he wondered dizzily how he came to recognize him. He rather prided himself on his knowledge of the plain-clothes squad, but to this man's identity he could find no clue. Well, it didn't matter much. Here he was, taken with the diamonds on him. What was the shortest sentence he dare expect?

The car had drawn up beside the pavement, and its driver had leaped out. "Here, Jim, just hold Mr. Herridge's hand for a moment, will you?" said Pussy's captor. "I shouldn't like him to lose himself in the fog again. Now then, Pussy, where have you stowed them. Pockets? No, ah, something hard under your shirt! Nice sort of chest protector, Pussy, just the thing for a fog like this. Right, I've got them, Jim."

The driver got back into his seat, and his captor pushed the unresisting Mr. Herridge into the back. "We'll have a little drive together, won't we, Pussy?" he said, and he took his place beside him. "Just as far as the Yard, where we'll have a nice cozy chat. Right away, Jim."

The car started off, and Mr. Herridge, still handcuffed, settled himself back into his seat, trying to summon all his wits to meet the coming ordeal. It wasn't only the Hardway diamonds; that was a fair cop, from which there was no chance of escape. But there were other things, about which awkward questions might be asked, past crimes which, unless he were careful, might be dragged to light. It was with no cheerful anticipation that Mr. Herridge regarded the coming interview.

The fog was still thick, and the driver had some difficulty in finding his way. At the end of Deben street he checked, and flung a question over his shoulder to his companion. The latter leaned forward to reply, momentarily slackening his grasp of Mr. Herridge's arm. In a flash Mr. Herridge had wriggled himself free. With a sudden desperate movement, he vaulted clean out of the car and fell sprawling in the roadway. Scrambling to his feet, he took to his heels and ran as he had never run before. He heard a shout behind him, and then the kindly fog swallowed him up once more.

CHAPTER II

Mr. Herridge's knowledge of London was extensive and peculiar. Even in the first mad dash of his escape his instinct of locality kept him from running into any cul-de-sac in which he must be instantly trapped. He kept to the wide streets still shrouded in fog, and doubled back on his tracks, until he was once more in the uncharted wastes of Woodbridge Square.

The center of the Square was occupied by a patch of turf, in which stood a few plain trees, the whole surrounded by a tall iron railing. Manacled though he was, Mr. Herridge found no difficulty in surmounting this. He ran lightly to the center of the turf, and there paused, striving with all his senses to penetrate the fog. But all that came to his ears was the curiously muffled roar of London. It dawned upon him, almost with a shock of apprehension, that there was no pursuit.

This puzzled him even more than his capture had puzzled him. He had expected, even as he leapt from the car, the sudden shrilling of a police whistle, to be taken up and re-echoed on all sides by unseen constables on beat. But nothing of the sort had happened. Beyond the startled shout of his captor, the men in the car had given no sign. Mr. Herridge, standing tense and vigilant in the center of the Square, felt a creepy sensation of uneasiness running up and down his spine. This ominous silence could only mean that by some mysterious means the police had followed him; knew where he was at this very moment. He imagined he could hear the silent tread of men pouring into the Square, lining the railings, waiting for the moment when he must seek escape from his self-chosen prison. Perhaps they would not wait for that. Even now they might be entering the garden by a dozen gates, converging upon him.

Inaction was impossible; and to his agonized eyes it seemed that every moment the fog was lifting; that he must shortly be revealed to a thousand staring eyes. But where to go? Had he been seen doubling back, every exit from the Square would now be blocked, even if he succeeded in surmounting the garden railings unobserved. And his manacled hands must necessarily betray him to the first passerby.

More in desperation than with any real hope of escape he crept quietly over the turf towards the railings. At every step he expected to see the gleam of a policeman's lantern, but still he kept on. At last he reached the railings, and cowered against them in an agony of expectation. A sound of slow footfalls came to him, and he shrank away from the railings again. The steps approached, maddening in their deliberation. Their owner knew where he was hidden; he was advancing upon him with the relentlessness of doom. He was not more than twenty yards away, ten—

Mr. Herridge, quivering in every nerve, like a hare lying close in its furrow, listened—each step reverberating in his ears like thunder. They paused—he was lost. Then, unhesitatingly, they passed on.

A sudden reaction fell upon Mr. Herridge. His terror gave place to a sort of wild bravado, and he felt equal to faving the unseen dangers which surrounded him. Better, far, to have a run for his money than to be caught like a rat in a trap. He ran at the railings, scrambled over them without a sound and landed on his feet in the road beyond. Then expecting every moment to see a cordon of police loom out of the darkness before him, he began to run, easily and silently.

He had first no clear idea of his goal. It hardly seemed to matter since his recapture was practically a certainty. He began to long for the tension to end, to feel that grasp upon his shoulder which would end his brief period of liberty. Some instinct took him eastwards, towards the Deben street exit of the Square. This, surely, was the direction his pursuers would at least expect him to take. To his amazement the exit was unguarded, and he ran the whole length of Deben street, keeping to the middle of the road and avoiding the few passers-by whose business was pressing enough to induce them to brave the fog. Then, incredulous of his continued freedom, he slowed his pace down to a walk.

His wits were slowly returning to him, and as he walked he sought desperately for some plan of action. Whichever way he looked, things seemed pretty hopeless. His identity was known to the police; he had been captured with the famous Hardway diamonds upon him. The plain-clothes man who had arrested him had addressed him by the name by which he was known to his associates. No doubt he had been watched, traced to Woodbridge Square. His captor had even mentioned Wapping; without doubt his lodgings there were under observation. It would merely be to walk into the lion's mouth to attempt to make his way home.

Even if he could cross London in his present plight, the spectacle of a man with manacled hands was not so common that it would fail to attract attention. He was bound to be stopped by the first constable he passed. No doubt his captor would have warned every policeman in London to look out for him. He could not even change his appearance, for it was impossible for him to so much as take off his raincoat. There seemed to be nothing for him but to slink about the streets, like some forlorn Wandering Jew, until the fog should lift, and reveal him to the eager eyes of his pursuers.

So hopeless did the prospect seem that he almost resolved to make his way to the nearest police station and give himself up. There, at least he would find warmth and respite from his ceaseless tramping. But the prospect of recapture was too awful to be lightly faced. There was just one faint chance for him, so faint that it seemed hardly worthy of a moment's consideration. If he could only reach Ginger Murdoch's place, he might find asylum. Not that Ginger would welcome him with open arms. That was hardly to be expected. But he knew an argument which would prevail over Ginger's inhospitality. He could threaten that if he himself were nabbed, he would split on Ginger. And Ginger had as much reason to dread an appearance in court as he had himself.

Ginger Murdoch lived in Hoxton, five miles perhaps from where he stood, even if he took the direct route. But the direct route led through a series of main thoroughfares, which, even in the thickest fog, were bound to be thronged with traffic. There was no possibility of getting rid of the damning handcuffs until he reached Murdoch's place. The only thing to do was to follow the most unfrequented streets, and try to attract as little attention as possible. This would take him a couple of hours at least.

He folded his arms, pushing each hand as far up the opposite sleeve as possible. In this way only the chain of the handcuffs was visible, and Mr. Herridge trusted that it would not be noticeable in the fog. Then he set off, arms folded, head bent, trying to assume an innocent air of contemplation.

COD LIVER OIL IS FOOD; GOOD FOR CHILDREN

Cod liver oil is a food rather than a medicine and is an important part of the diet in winter months in sections of the country as far north as Chicago. Children and parents would likely be more healthy and more happy if they recognized this, according to home economics specialists.

Two vitamins which the body needs most are found in cod liver oil, dictations of New York State College of Home Economics report. These vitamins are A and D.

The first is also found in butter, cream, eggs and in green, leafy and yellow vegetables. The concentration in cod liver oil is much greater than in any of these other foods, and since vitamin A is stored in the body it is a highly desirable food, even when green vegetables and dairy products are present in the diet. Vitamin A is an anti-infection vitamin and protects both adults and children against common colds.

The second vitamin found in cod liver oil, vitamin D, prevents rickets, and has no other source except direct sunlight and ultra-violet lamps. Since this vitamin is thought of as preventing and curing rickets, parents may feel that children who show no signs of this disease need not take cod liver oil. Yet vitamin D is necessary to the storing of calcium and phosphorus, necessary for straight, strong bones and sound teeth, and even abundant calcium and phosphorus in the diet may not entirely prevent tooth decay.

Where warm strong sunlight is available throughout the year, the child's body may be exposed to it in play, and the vitamin D in cod liver oil is less necessary; but in the northern latitudes sunlight, during the winter months, does not take the place of cod liver oil.

In rare instances, children may be unable to take cod liver oil because of its oiliness and its peculiar flavor, but much of the opposition to the oil comes from the children who have heard adults express a distaste for it. The child who has always had his daily teaspoon of cod liver oil will not find it had to take as long as it is not suggested to him that it is disagreeable.

Provide Score Card For Judging Bread

Providing good bread for the family is one of the important concerns of the homemaker, especially the one who does her own baking. A score card which was included in a U. S. Department of Agriculture bulletin on "Home Baking," as a helpful means of judging yeast bread has been suggested by Miss Edna Smith, leader of home demonstration agents at Michigan State College.

Based on a total score of 100 points, 10 are allowed for general appearance, considering the shape or roundness of "dome." Smoothness, with no cracks, bulges, lumps, or the like showing, and the color of the crust, which should be a golden brown, are also considered.

Ten points are allowed for lightness, and 10 for the crust as to thickness and quality or crispness and tenderness. Five points go to the color of the crumb, which should be light cream, and 25 to the texture of the crumb. There should be no streaks or extreme closeness of grain, and the size and uniformity of cells, thinness of cell walls, elasticity (softness and springiness) are other considerations of the crumb.

Flavor, taste, and odor (sweet, nutty, with no "off" taste) count 30 points. The remaining 10 points are contained in the keeping qualities.

Yeast may be bought in dry or compressed cakes or grown at home in the form of a "starter," or "liquid yeast." Dry cakes are recommended as keeping better than the other forms, but since the yeast cells are not growing activity, longer time is required to make bread with dried yeast. Compressed yeast is the most convenient to use if it can be obtained fresh. This type is usually more expensive and spoils rather easily.

Modes and Manners

Question—"I am in my senior high school year. Every one in my crowd uses slang, but whenever I do I feel strained and unnatural. I'd like to be able to be smart and flippant, like the other girls. It is making me self-conscious not to be able to compete with them. What do you suggest?" Gertrude R.

Answer—Charm is naturalness and nothing more. It is more natural for you to speak correctly, be yourself. Evidently are not the "wise-cracking" type of youngster. To attempt to become one yourself would be a waste of time and it is doubtful if you could ever rank as a frivolous flapper.

If you understand all the slang expressions, and can listen to the rapid fire "smart" conversation of your contemporaries without wincing, you are one of them, in spirit anyway. And I am sure if you use the words which you find most apt in putting your meaning across, they will understand you perfectly.

Bloused Treatment and Surplice Lines

A rich bottle green chiffon is selected for the gown at the left, the bodice easily bloused. The over-the-elbow sleeves gracefully full, and the skirt gaining fullness through radiating tucks that emanate in the bodice and are released at a low line. Green and gold metal cloth girdles the waistline and ties at one side. The companion frock, developed in black Canton crepe, affects a surplice bodice, and is unbelted, an easy movement being manifested at the waistline. Inserts of heavy net create a sheer detail on bodice and sleeves.

Church Service Flag Has 81 Stars

By the adoption of Miss Jeane Walvoord as its second missionary in the Orient, First Reformed church, Holland's pioneer church, founded by Dr. A. C. Van Raalte in 1847, has added its eighty-first star to its service flag, a record probably unequalled by any church in the Reformed Church in America. The stars represent former members of the church who have entered home and foreign mission fields as ministers, missionaries and nurses.

Names of deceased, represented by gold stars, include some of the pioneer ministers in the Holland colony, Rev. and Mrs. E. J. Heeren, the first Reformed missionaries from the west to enter the foreign field; college presidents and retired missionaries.

First church recently celebrated the eighty-fourth anniversary of its organization. Mrs. D. Dykstra, daughter of John A. Wilterdink, one of its pioneer officers and members, was adopted as its first missionary in Arabia 25 years ago. She was married on the field to Rev. D. Dykstra, graduate of Hope college and Western Theological seminary.

Miss Walvoord was born in Japan and came to Holland 12 years ago with her mother and two sisters.

Miss Walvoord received her B. S. and R. N. degrees in Ann Arbor. She will practice her profession as nurse in Chinese hospitals. She is a daughter of Mrs. E. Walvoord of Holland.

U. P. Woman Finds Handicap Spur To Success

Mrs. Odile Hardy, who resides 12 miles west of Manistique, is proof that none need despair because of handicaps. Crippled from early childhood, Mrs. Hardy nevertheless has managed to make a success of life.

When she was 11 years old tuberculosis of the hip bone developed. Four years later she could walk only with the aid of crutches and when 17 she went to Detroit where her right leg was shortened five inches as a result of two operations, but her trouble still continued.

Returning home, she heard of what had been accomplished at St. Anne de Beaupre, Quebec, and with the aid of friends collected enough money for the trip. After having been there 18 days she was able to discard one crutch and in 10 days more she substituted a cane for the other crutch. She still carries a cane to prevent a serious jar upon her hip as she walks.

Thirty-one years ago she was married to the late Joseph Hardy, who died two years ago. A son, Joseph, himself a cripple, operates the 160-acre farm while his mother takes care of the house.

While in the Detroit hospital Mrs. Hardy learned the first steps in art embroidery. She makes rag and yarn rugs which have been sold as far east as Quebec and west to Montana. At Schoolcraft county fairs she has won honors and now is working on a design to be sent to the World's fair in Chicago.

Speaking of Style By IRENE VAIL

New York—Since we always show our interest in a new season by donning our hats to it, let's begin with hats. The most sensational rumor about them is that sailors are to be worn, but then that is a rumor one has heard before without much evidence to back it up. It's abroad again, however, and seems to be seriously considered. Brims turning up in the back are another thing gossiped about, while, of course, we will usher in the season in town by continuing to wear close fitting hats, turbans or tams that offer no resistance to high-standing fur collars.

The shadow of Louis XIV hats appears the characteristic feature of the type—the back and one side turned up against the crown, and the forward-tilted movement. The latter is regarded as especially significant as a trend, fostering the forward tilt in place of the down-over-one-eye silhouette familiar in current millinery.

The convenience of being able to wear hats year in and year out is no longer ours, excepting with reservations. Milliners are offering straws in great variety and too attractive to be ignored. There is still a definite place for the fabric hat, and that is with the suit or lightweight wool frock and cape ensemble. Ribbons of various kinds are used for the flexible form of hat, draped and otherwise, always a good between-season choice. The list of desirable ribbons is an extensive one and includes some old favorites, such as the picot edge, and even the scalloped edged ribbons.

It is amusing how quick women are to appropriate fabric or fashions worn by man. The latest recruit to feminine ranks is seersucker, that very casual cotton men formed the habit of wearing last summer. The seersucker frock is going south this winter with a vengeance, for it is to be another cotton and linen year.

Those of us who are staying north take our linens and cottons in homeopathic doses, via the collar and cuff formula. While collarless cloth gowns are complete in themselves, one may wear frivolous or tailored lingerie sets with them.

Begin With Meat When Cutting Down Food Budget

On planning your food budget you should be cheered by the fact that it is possible to live well on a comparatively small food allowance if you know how to plan and manage your buying. You cannot hope to plan your meals carefully and economically unless you plan in advance. Most women shirk this task. It is easier to wait until almost time for the meal, then go to the market and buy steaks, chops and vegetables that can be prepared easily and quickly.

Then, too, if you wait until you get to the market to do your planning, there are all kinds of expensive, out-of-season vegetables to tempt you so you are likely to forget the delicious dishes that can be concocted out of cheaper foods. Of course there are various needs such as green, leafy vegetables and citrus fruits that must be included in each day's menus, but there are numerous other vegetables that give both variety and valuable food elements to the diet.

Make a list of the inexpensive vegetables and foods and compare the prices at various markets. Of course, you should do your shopping at the market that gives you the best quality for the least money. Just what one list should include is determined by your knowledge of food values. Fortunately the most expensive foods are seldom the most nutritious, and those that taste the best are not necessarily the costliest.

Meat will illustrate the difference between food value and price and it is here that economy must begin when you wish to cut down the food budget. There is an enormous difference in the prices of cuts of meat from the same animal. The most popular cuts are those that are tender and easy to prepare—but the most expensive. If properly cooked the cheaper cut is just as nourishing and just as palatable.

Collect recipes and jot down ideas for economy that seem worth trying. There are hundreds of low-cost meat dishes such as breast of lamb stuffed with spinach, apples stuffed with sausage, jellied veal, curried lamb, stews of meat and dried fruit combinations, pot roasts and casserole dishes including both vegetables and meats. If you are really interested in cutting costs, you must learn to use inexpensive cuts of meat to keep your family interested. The inexpensive meat cuts include breast, flank, hearts, kidneys, pork liver, pig's feet, neck (for stew), chuck and rump for roasting. Make a list of cheap meat cuts and opposite each one write down ways for preparing it. Start at the top of the list and include each thing in your menu at least once until you have served them all, then repeat.

If the bathroom wash basin is washed out after each using, there will be little chance for it to become spotted, stained or grimy. Generally there is a tendency to be more careless about the wash basin than about the bathtub.

You and Your Child

By JANE HERBERT GOWARD

BIG FOR HIS AGE

Recently, I visited a friend, the mother of two children, a boy of 13 and a boy of 7. It happens that while I have been in her house many times in the last few years, I have always come in the evening, when the children were safely tucked in bed and out of the way for the night. This time, however, an overgrown lad joined right in the party. He joined us in the dining room and sat with us in the living room. All evening long I could not conceal my surprise. So this was Ted? How he had grown and developed since I saw him last.

Around about midnight the youngster began to struggle to keep his eyes open. With elbow resting on the low mantelpiece, he held his head. Occasionally he dozed. But he did not leave his post.

"Why don't you send Ted along to bed?" someone inquired of the lad's mother and out of earshot of the boy. "He'll go when he's ready—" "He's ready now," someone ventured. This brought forth gales of laughter, and caused the lad to shift his position and prick up his ears.

"There are some cigarettes in the other room, Ted," his mother suggested. And when the boy had left us she said, "See how wide-awake he is? He doesn't want to miss a thing. And I don't think he should! Besides, it is Saturday night. He can make up in rest tomorrow. The whole affair is a treat for him—and very educational, I'm sure." Ted came back with the cigarettes, resumed his post, and the conversation turned to other topics.

Several days later I met Ted's mother on the train. "I'm curious about your boy," I said. "Ever since I saw him, I have been wondering what prompted the line of treatment you have undertaken."

She smiled. "Well," she said, "it is quite a story. Ted is not like other boys. His size, I think, is against him. He is at least a head taller than any of the lads in his class. They recognize his superior size and strength and prefer to admire him than to invite him to join them at their games. The older boys consider him a kid. And, truthfully, he is, despite his height and weight. His shoes are a size larger than his father's—would you believe it?"

I expressed my surprise, not so much for the number 11's which the lad wears, but more because his mother was so calm about it all.

"Yes," he does," Ted's mother continued proudly. "And that isn't all. He is half a head taller than his dad. At first we were quite alarmed. But when discovered why he preferred staying at home, we decided to make home as pleasant as possible, and to allow him as much freedom as we could. You see, we want to keep him happy. And if he is free to express himself at home and can develop along the lines which he is best adapted by nature to follow, there won't be any room in his life for discontentment."

"There certainly is nothing dull about the boy," I reflected. "He plays a very intelligent game of chess. And while he did not have much to say the other night, I consider it a healthy sign that one so young can show such a lively interest in grownup topics, international politics and the arts."

"That's just it" Ted's mother added enthusiastically. "For some time he has shown a preference for the companionship of adults. I decided not to tell him to go and play with children his own age, as I know his size and the long trousers he wears make him feel quite grown-up. I play to his ego. This inspires him to excel when matched against the children in his class."

"His teacher has recognized his ability and has suggested to the principal that he be sent along through school more quickly. I have given my consent, of course. I don't want Ted to feel inferior just because he is unlike other boys of his age. I want him to develop mentally until he has caught up with his size and is able properly to adjust himself to friendships with boys and girls who, though older, are his equals."

Your Handwriting— and What It Tells

By JANET WINTON

SCRIPT SHOWING BAFFLING PERSONALITY

"Dear Janet Winton: My curiosity as to what my handwriting reveals is so strong that I would like very much to get your general analysis.—L. A. Buffalo, N. Y.

Your handwriting illustrates interestingly to what extent training can obliterate certain natural endowments. Judging from the size of your writing tend" because I suspect that those who have dealings with you find it hard to be indifferent. You puzzle them, pique their curiosity. They are interested, but they do not like you. They fear your silence, and the mysterious, elusive something about your personality which they find so baffling.

Persons of your disposition and habits must necessarily be lonely. And this loneliness intensifies what ails is so strong that I very much to get up

alone, the amateur would be tempted to adjudge you as a generous personality. The leisurely motion also betrays your motives. This staid tempo, however, is not created by patience and indolence, as one is led to believe, but by a suspicion that someone will double-cross you if you don't go slowly and watch your step.

Of course, I have no way of learning from your handwriting what circumstances in your life are responsible for this extreme cautious tendency. But suffice it to say that the characteristic is present and that signs indicate that originally it was contrary to your nature to hide and distrust. For you are not conniving. Nor do you want to take advantage of others. Nor did nature mean for you to be clever. Rather you are sharp and wary from habit and to protect yourself.

Lassoed "o" and other tightly closed letters reveal you to be silent as the sphinx—and a poker face. One never knows how to take you, whether to smile and be friendly and to prompt you to react in similar fashion, or to pretend to ignore you. I say "pre-them. They need sympathy. It has to be proved that human beings are at heart not such a bad lot as you have been taught to believe them. Some expression of sincerity and friendliness on the part of another is what you need for a long period and, until your suspicions have been broken down and you find it easier to believe.

As in other things, one needs practice in trusting. But how are you to give others their cue if you do not encourage friendship? Like begets like. And while deep down, and in your own conscience, you are everything you should be, unless you show it, they have no way of knowing.

Imagination is present in your handwriting. Upward tilted "t" bars reveal high ideals. Pronoun "I" with the accentuated lower form backs up this deduction. It shows that more than anything, you are intent upon living up to your ideals. And to preclude outside opposition, you keep your pursuits and interests secret. As far as you are concerned, these are a personal matter and nothing to be shared again explaining your silence and mystery.

Household Hints

Suggestions

Heat the milk to boiling point when making an egg custard pit, and the undercrust will be crisp.

Always add a little melted butter to uncooked frosting to prevent it cracking.

To keep the metal tops of salt shakers from corroding, cover the inside with melted paraffin. The holes may be opened while the paraffin is cooling and is still plastic.

Avoid that homemade look in clothes by pressing every seam as it is sewed.
